LETTERS

OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

Lady M—y W——y M——e:

Written during her TRAVELS in EUROPE, ASIA, AND AFRICA, Persons of Distinction, Men of Letters, &c. in different Parts of Europe.

WHICH CONTAIN

AMONG OTHER CURIOUS RELATIONS,

ACCOUNTS of the POLICY and MANNERS of the TURKS;

Drawn from Sources that have been inaccessible to other Travellers.

A NEW EDITION.

To which are now first added,

P O E M S,

By the fame Author.

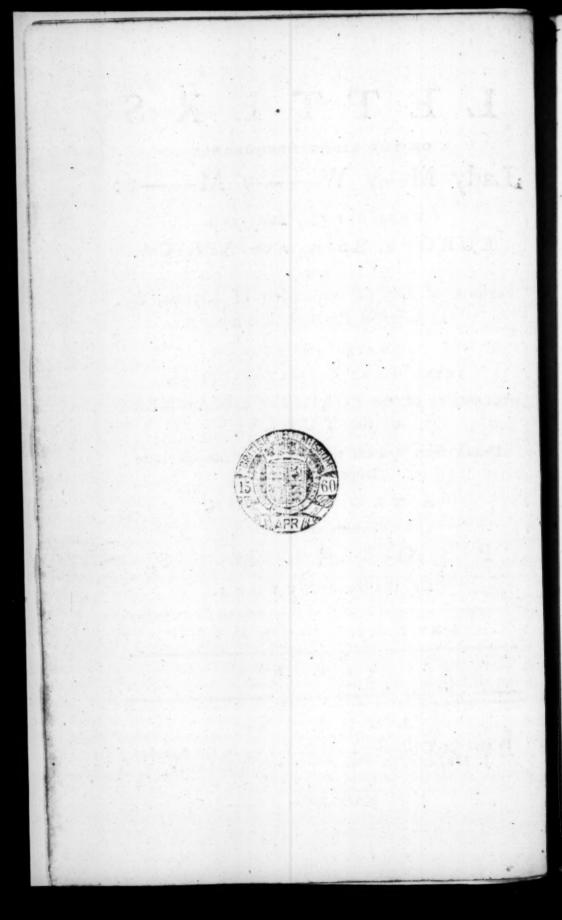

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

J. MURRAY, in Fleet-Street; and R. BALDWIN, in Pater-noster-Row.

M DCC LXXXIV.

PREFACE

BYA

L A. D Y.

Written in 1724.

I W A S going, like common editors, to advertise the reader of the beauties and excellencies of the work laid before him: To tell him that the illustrious author had opportunities, that other travellers, whatever their quality or curiofity may have been, cannot obtain; and a genius capable of making the best improvement of every opportunity.

But if the reader after perusing one letter only, has not discernment to distinguish that natural elegance, that delicacy of sentiment and observation, that easy gracefulness, and lovely simplicity (which is the persection of writing) and in which these these Letters exceed all that has appeared in this kind, or almost in any other, let him lay the book down, and leave it to those who have.

The noble author had the goodness to lend me her MS. to fatisfy my curiofity in fome enquiries I had made concerning her travels; and when I had it in my hands, how was it possible to part with it? I once had the vanity to hope I might acquaint the public, that it owed this invaluable treasure to my importunities. But alas! the most ingenious author has condemned it to obscurity during her life; and conviction, as well as deference, obliges me to yield to her reasons. However, if these Letters appear hereafter when I am in my grave, let this attend them, in testimony to posterity, that among her cotemporaries, one woman, at least, was just to her merit.

There is not any thing so excellent, but some will carp at it, and the rather, because of its excellency. But to such hypercritics, I shall only say * * * * * * *

I confess,

I confess, I am malicious enough to desire, that the world should see, to how much better purpose the LADIES travel than their LORDS; and that, whilft it is furfeited with Male Travels, all in the same tone, and stuft with the same trifles; a lady has the skill to strike out a new path, and to embellish a worn-out subject, with variety of fresh and elegant entertainment. For besides the vivacity and spirit which enlivens every part, and that inimitable beauty which spreads through the whole; besides the purity of the style, for which it may be juftly accounted the standard of the English tongue; the reader will find a more true and accurate account of the cuftoms and manners of the several nations, with whom this lady conversed, than he can in any other author. But as her ladyship's penetration discovers the inmost follies of the heart, fo the candour of her temper paffed over them with an air of pity rather than reproach; treating with the politeness of a court, and the gentleness of a lady, what the severity of her judgment could not but condemn.

In short, let her own sex, at least, do her justice, lay aside diabolical Envy, and its Brother Malice*, with all their accurfed company, fly whifpering, cruel backbiting, spiteful detraction, and the rest of that hideous crew, which I hope are very falsely said to attend the Tea-Table, being more apt to think they frequent those public places were virtuous women never come. Let the men malign one another, if they think fit, and strive to pull down merit when they cannot equal it. Let us be better natured, than to give way to any unkind or difrespectful thought of so bright an ornament to our fex, merely because she has better fense; for I doubt not but our hearts will tell us, that this is the real and unpardonable offence, whatever may be pretended. Let us be better Christians, than to look upon her with an evil eye, only because the Giver of all good gifts has intrusted and adorned her with the most excellent talents. Rather let us freely own the superiority of this sublime genius, as I do in the sincerity of my soul, pleased that a woman triumphs, and proud to follow in her train. Let us offer her the palm which is so justly her due; and if we pretend to any laurels, lay them willingly at her seet.

^{*} This fair and elegant prefacer has resolved, that Malice should be of the Masculine Gender: I believe it is both Masculine and Feminine, and I heartily wish it were Neuter.

December 18,

M. A.

Charm'd into love of what obscures my fame, If I had wit, I'd celebrate her name, And all the beauties of her mind proclaim. Till Malice, deafen'd with the mighty sound, It's ill-concerted calumnies consound; Let fall the mask, and with pale Envy meet, To ask, and find, their pardon at her feet.

}

You see, Madam, how I lay every thing at your seet. As the tautology shews the poverty of my genius, it likewise shews the extent of your empire over my imagination.

May 31, 1725.

100

me ; the detigned to pay but covolubes a first was glad of the opportunity of going more to the same that the standard as to bared ! fante fort of omance ! Remain Catholic character a faint's hody, where I me and a picture of the second is of his painting, but . . dops of Italy is not in mer taged to the bert in racles The Circumstance their pictures, we are a win and in him many ways drawn aport magine what a good, at a religious have no none, cither of that we were the They have a billiop bure, why add see a purple robe, and formant at was easy as myielf for a prefer. ing We sy right, On A garagest ink the original Grand Mar A 3 5 5 . of the state of the state of the guardion stom a glammet in the marky a month dery of Dorviles, na 128 of steam a large court, 7,00 ...

LETTER I

12

3

20 13

10

30

61

th

W

ATT

SIL

T

ug

28 qai

8 18

101

435

131

To the Countels of ---- Rotterdam, Aug. 3, O.S. 1716.

I FLATTER myself (dear sister) that I shall give you some pleasure in letting you know that I have safely passed the sea, though we had the ill fortune of a storm. We were perfuaded by the captain of the yacht to fet out in a calm, and he pretended there was nothing so easy as to tide it over; but, after two days flowly moving, the wind blew fo hard, that none of the failors could keep their feet, and we were all Sunday night toffed very handsomely. I never faw a man more frighted than the captain. For my part, I have been fo lucky, neither to fuffer from fear nor sea-sickness; tho', I confess-I was fo impatient to fee myfelf once more upon dry land, that I would not flay till the yacht could get to Rotterdam, but went in the long-VOL. I. boat boat to Helvoetsluys, where we had voitures to carry us to the Briel. I was charmed with the neatness of that little town; but my arrival at Rotterdam presented me a new scene of pleasure. All the streets are paved with broad stones, and before many of the meanest artificers doors are placed feats of various-coloured marbles, fo neatly kept, that I affure you, I walked almost all over the town yesterday, incognito, in my flippers, without receiving one spot of dirt; and you may fee the Dutch maids washing the pavement of the ffreet with more application than ours do our bed chambers. The town feems fo full of people, with fuch bufy faces, all in motion, that I can hardly fancy it is not some celebrated fair; but I fee it is every day the same. 'Tis certain no town can be more advantageoufly fituated for commerce. Here are seven large canals, on which the merchant ships come up to the very doors of their houses. The shops and warehouses are of a surprizing neatness and magnificence, filled with an incredible quantity of fine merchandize, and so much cheaper than what

e

t

2.

d

re

o

ft

y

be

e-

an fo

ole-

ne.

fly

rge

up

ops

and

tity

han

hat

what we fee in England, that I have much ado to persuade myself I am still so near it. Here is neither dirt nor beggary to be feen. One is not shocked with those loathsome cripples, so common in London, nor teized with the importunity of idle fellows and wenches, that chuse to be nafty and lazy. The common fervants and little shop-women, here, are more nicely clean, than most of our ladies, and the great variety of neat dreffes (every woman dreffing her head after her own fashion) is an additional pleasure in seeing the town. You fee, hitherto, I make no complaints, dear fifter, and if I continue to like travelling as well as I do at prefent, I shall not repent my project. It will go a great way in making me fatisfied with it, if it affords me an opportunity of entertaining you. But it is not from Holland, that you must expect a disinterested offer. I can write enough in the stile of Rotterdam, to tell you plainly, in one word, that I expect returns of all the London news. You fee I have already learnt to make a good bargain, and that it is not for nothing I will fo much as tell you, I am, your affectionate fifter.

B 2

LET-

LETTER II.

To Mrs. S. --

Hague, Aug. 5, O.S. 1716.

MAKE haste to tell you, dear Madam, that after all the dreadful fatigues you threatened me with, I am hitherto very well pleafed with my journey. We take care to make fuch fhort stages every day, that I rather fancy myself upon parties of pleasure, than upon the road; and fure nothing can be more agreeable than travelling in Holland. The whole eountry appears a large garden; the roads are well paved, shaded on each fide with rows of trees, and bordered with large canals, full of boats, paffing and repaffing. Every twenty paces gives you the prospect of some villa, and every four hours, that of a large town, fo furprizingly neat, I am fure you would be charmed with them. The place I am now at, is certainly one of the finest villages in the world. Here are feveral squares finely built, and (what I think a particular beauty) the whole fet with thick large trees. Voor-hout is, at the same time, the Hyde Park and Mall of the people of quality; for they take the air in it both on foot and in coaches. There are shops for wafers, cool liquors, &c. I have been to see several of the most celebrated gardens, but I will not teize you with their descriptions. I dare swear you thing my letter already long enough. But I must not conclude without begging your pardon, for not obeying your commands, in fending the lace you ordered me. Upon my word I can yet find none, that is not dearer than you may buy it in London. If you want any India goods, here are great variety of penny-worths, and I shall follow your orders with great pleasure and exactness, being,

Dear, Madam, &c. &c.

B 3

LET-

ce I

6.

a-

ou

ell

to ier

an ore

'he

the

rith

als,

rery

ome

arge

you

LETTER III.

To Mrs. S. C.

Nimeguen, Aug. 13, O. S. 1716.

I AM extremely forry, my dear S. that your fears of disobliging your relations, and their fears for your health and fafety, have hindered me from enjoying the happiness of your company, and you the pleasure of a diverting journey. I receive fome degree of mortification from every agreeable novelty, or pleasing prospect, by the reflection of your having so unluckily missed the delight which I know it would have given you. If you were with me in this town, you would be ready to expect to receive vifits from your Nottingham friends. No two places were ever more refembling; one has but to give the Maese the name of the Trent, and there is no diffinguishing the profpect. The houses, like those of Nottingham are built one above another, and are intermixed, in the the fame manner, with trees and gardens. The Tower, they call Julius Cæsar's, has the same fituation with Nottingham Castle; and I cannot help fancying I see from it the Trentfield, Adboulton, places fo well known to us. 'Tis true, the fortifications make a confiderable difference. All the learned in the art of war, beflow great commendations on them; for my part, that know nothing of the matter, I shall content myself with telling you, 'tis a very pretty walk on the ramparts, on which there is a tower, very defervedly called the Belvidera, where people go to drink coffee, tea, &c. and enjoy one of the finest prospects in the world. The public walks have no great beauty, but the thick shade of the trees, which is solemnly delightful. But I must not forget to take notice of the bridge, which appeared very furprifing to It is large enough to hold hundreds of men, with horses and carriages. They give the value of an English two-pence to get upon it, and then away they go, bridge and all, to the other fide of the river, with fo flow a motion,

.

S.

S, ve

of

li-

of

y, ur

1 I

ith

ect

ds.

g; the

of-

are in

the

B 4

one

one is hardly fensible of any at all. I was yesterday at the French church, and stared very much at their manner of service. The parson clapped on a broad-brimmed hat in the first place, which gave him entirely the air of, what d'ye call him, in Bartholomew fair, which he kept up by extraordinary antic gestures, and preaching much fuch stuff, as t'other talked to the puppets. However, the congregation feemed to receive it with great devotion; and I was informed by fome of his flock, that he is a perfon of particular fame amongst them. I believe, by this time, you are as much tired with my account of him, as I was with his fermon; but I am fure your brother will excuse a digression in favour of the church of England. You know, speaking disrespectfully of the Calvinists, is the same thing as speaking honourably of the church. Adieu, my dear S. always remember me, and be affured, I can never forget you, &c. &c.

LETTER IV.

1-

n

e, ye

pt

h-

he

ed

as

r-

e-

th

n ;

li-

id.

al-

oly

re-

get

To the Lady ----

Cologn, Aug. 16, O.S. 1716.

IF my lady - could have any notions of the fatigues that I have fuffered these two last days, I am fure she would own it a great proof of regard, that I now fit down to write to her. We hired horses from Nimeguen hither, not having the conveniency of the post, and found but very indifferent accommodations at Reinberg, our first stage; but it was nothing to what I suffered yesterday. We were in hopes to reach Cologn; our horses tired at Stamel, three hours from it, where I was forced to pass the night in my clothes, in a room not at all better than a hovel; for though I have my bed with me, I had no mind to undress, where the wind came from a thousand places. We left this wretched lodging at daybreak, and about fix this morning came fafe here, here, where I got immediately into bed. I slept fo well for three hours, that I found myfelf perfeetly recovered, and have had spirits enough to go and fee all that is curious in the town, that is to fay, the churches, for here is nothing elfe worth feeing. This is a very large town, but the most part of it is old built. The Jesuits' church, which is the neatest, was shewed me, in a very complaifant manner, by a handfome young Jesuit; who, not knowing who I was, took a liberty in his compliments and railleries, which very much diverted me. Having never before feen any thing of that nature, I could not enough admire the magnificence of the altars, the rich images of the faints, (all maffy filver) and the enchasures of the relicks, tho' I could not help murmuring in my heart, at the profusion of pearls, diamonds, and rubies, bestowed on the adornment of rotten teeth and dirty rags. I own that I had wickedness enough to covet St. Urfula's pearl necklace; though perhaps this was no wickedness at all, an image not being certainly one's neighbour;

t

.

0

at

(e it

s

e,

e

5,

s, er ld

ne

Ty

o'

t,

1-

th

·ss

0;

11,

r; but

but I went yet further, and wished the wench herfelf converted into dreffing plate. I should also gladly see converted into silver, a great St. Christopher, which I imagine would look very well in a ciftern. These were my pious reflections; though I was very well fatisfied to fee, piled up to the honour of our nation, the fkulls of the Eleven Thousand Virgins. I have feen fome hundreds of relics here, of no lefs consequence; but I will not imitate the common file of travellers fo far, as to give you a lift of them, being perfuaded that you have no manner of curiofity for the titles given to jawbones, and bits of worm-eaten wood .- Adieu. I am just going to supper, where I shall drink your health in an admirable fort of Lorrain wine, which I am fure is the fame you call Burgundy in London, &c. &c.

LETTER V.

To the Countess of B---

Nuremberg, Aug. 22, O.S. 1716.

AFTER five days travelling post, I could not fit down to write on any other occasion than to tell my dear Lady, that I have not forgot her obliging command of fending her fome account of my travels. I have already passed a large part of Germany, have seen all that is remarkable in Cologn, Frankfort, Wurtfburg, and this place. 'Tis impossible not to observe the difference between the free towns, and those under the government of absolute princes, as all the little fovereigns of Germany are. In the first there appears an air of commerce and plenty. The streets are well built, and full of people, neatly and plainly dreffed. The shops are loaded with merchandize, and the commonalty are clean and chearful .----In the other you fee a fort of shabby finery, a num-a number of dirty people of quality tawdered out; narrow nasty streets out of repair, wretchedly thin of inhabitants, and above half of the common fort asking alms. I cannot help fancying one, under the figure of a clean Dutch citizen's wife, and the other like a poor town lady of pleasure, painted, and ribboned out in her head-dress, with tarnished filver-laced shoes, a ragged under-petticoat, a miserable mixture of vice and poverty. -They have fumptuary laws in this town, which diffinguish their rank by their dress, prevent the excess which ruins formany other cities, and has a more agreeable effect to the eye of a stranger, than our fashions. I need not be ashamed to own, that I wish these laws were in force in other parts of the world. When one confiders impartially, the merit of a rich fuit of clothes in most places, the respect and the smiles of favour it procures, not to speak of the envy and the fighs it occasions (which is very often the principal charm to the wearer) one is forced to confess, that there is need of an uncommon understanding, to resist the temptation of pleasing friends, 5.

ng

ner

ve

ng

dy

all

f-

to 15, te

ıy

n-

t,

d.

nd

y,

1-

friends and mortifying rivals; and that it is natural to young people to fall into a folly, which betrays them to that want of money, which is the fource of a thousand basenesses. What numbers of men have begun the world with generous inclinations, that have afterwards been the instruments of bringing misery on a whole people, being led by a vain expence into debts that they could clear no other way, but by the forfeit of their honour, and which they never could have contracted, if the respect the multitude pays to habits, was fixed by law, only to a particular colour or cut of plain cloth. These reflections draw after them others that are too melancholy. I will make hafte to put them out of your head by the farce of relicks, with which I have been entertained in all Romish churches.

The Lutherans are not quite free from these follies. I have seen here in the principal church, a large piece of the Cross set in jewels, and the point of the spear, which, they told me, very gravely, was the same that pierced the side

a-

ch

is

n-

r-

he

0-

at

rld

de

r-

e-

e-

of

I

.

fe

al

S,

e,

of

of our Saviour. But I was particularly diverted in a little Roman catholic church, which is permitted here, where the professors of that religion are not very rich, and consequently cannot adorn their images in so rich a manner as their neighbours: For not to be quite destitute of all sinery, they have dressed up an image of our Saviour over the altar, in a fair full bottomed wig, very well powdered. I imagine I see your ladyship stare at this article, of which you very much doubt the veracity: but, upon my word, I have not yet made use of the priviledge of a traveller, and my whole account is written with the same plain sincerity of heart, with which I assure you that I am, dear Madam, Yours, &c. &c.

LETTER VI.

To Mrs. P---

Ratisbon, Aug. 30, O.S. 1716,

I HAD the pleasure of receiving yours but the day before I left London. I give you a thousand thanks for your good wifhes, and have fuch an opinion of their efficacy, that I am perfuaded, I owe, in part to them the good luck of having proceeded fo far on my long journey without any ill accident. For I don't reckon it any to have been stopped a few days, in this town, by a cold, fince it has not only given me an opportunity of feeing all that is curious in it, but of making fome acquaintance with the ladies, who have all been to fee me with great civility, particularly Madame -, the wife of our King's envoy from Hanover. She has carried me to all the affemblies, and I have been magnificently entertained at her house, which is one of the finest finest here. You know that all the nobility of this place are Envoys from different States. Here are a great number of them, and they might pass their time agreeably enough, if they were less delicate on the point of ceremony. But instead of joining in the design of making the town as pleafant to one another as they can, and improving their little focieties, they amuse themselves no other way, than with perpetual quarrels, which they take care to eternize, by leaving them to their fuccesfors; and an Envoy to Ratisbon receives, regularly, half a dozen quarrels, among the perquifites of his employment. You may be fure the ladies are not wanting, on their fide, in cherishing and improving those important piques, which divide the town almost into as many parties, as there are families. They chuse rather to fuffer the mortification of fitting almost alone on their assembly nights, than to recede one jot from their pretenfions. I have not been here above a week, and yet I have heard from almost every one of them, the whole history of their wrongs, and dreadful VOL. I. com-

I

d

i -

to

ar

t.

p-ce

of

ng.

ve

u-

to

tly

the .

rest

complaints of the injustice of their neighbours. in hopes to draw me to their party. But I think it very prudent to remain neuter, though if I was to flay amongst them, there would be no possibility of continuing so, their quarrels running fo high, that they will not be civil to those that visit their adversaries. The foundation of these everlasting disputes, turns entirely upon rank, place, and the title of Excellency, which they all pretend to, and what is very hard, will give it to no body. For my part I could not forbear advising them (for the public good) to give the title of Excellency to every body, which would include the receiving it from every body; but the very mention of fuch a dishonourable peace, was received with as much indignation, as Mrs. Blackaire did the motion of a reference. And indeed, I began to think myself ill-natured, to offer to take from them, in a town where there are fo few diversions, so entertaining an amuse. ment. I know that my peaceable disposition already gives me a very ill figure, and that 'tis pubrs,

I

igh

be

rels

to da-

rely

acy,

very

rt I

blic

very

g it

n of

with

e did

I beer to e are muse.

fition

at 'tis

pub-

publickly whifpered as a piece of impertinent pride in me, that I have hitherto been faucily civil to every body, as if I thought no body good enough to quarrel with. I should be obliged to change my behaviour, if I did not intend to pursue my journey in a few days. I have been to fee the churches here, and had the permission of touching the relicks, which was never fuffered in places where I was not known. I had, by this privilege, an opportunity of making an observation, which I doubt not, might have been made in all the other churches, that the emeralds and rubies which they shew round their relicks and images, are most of them false; though they tell you that many of the Croffes and Madonas fet round with these stones, have been the gifts of Emperors, and other great Princes. I don't doubt indeed but they were at first jewels of value; but the good fathers have found it convenient to apply them to other uses, and the people are just as well fatisfied with bits of glass amongst these relicks. They shewed me a prodigious claw fet in gold, which they called the claw of a griffin; and I could not forbear asking the Reverend Priest that shewed it, whether the Griffin was a Saint? The question almost put him beside his gravity; but he answered, they only kept it as a curiosity. I was very much scandalized at a large silver image of the Trinity, where the Father is represented under the figure of a decrepit old man, with a beard down to his knees, and tripple crown upon his head, holding in his arms the Son, sixed on the Cross, and the Holy Ghost, in the shape of a dove, hovering over him. Madam—is come this minute to call me to the assembly, and forces me to tell you very abruptly, that I am ever your, &c. &c.

C 2

the

LETTER VII.

To the Countess of-

Vienna, Sept. 8, O. S. 1716.

I AM now, my dear fifter, fafely arrived at Vienna, and I thank God, have not at all fuffered in my health, nor (what is dearer to me) in that of my child, by all our fatigues. We travelled by water from Ratisbon, a journey perfectly agreeable, down the Danube, in one of those little vessels, that they, very properly, call wooden houses, having in them all the conveniences of a palace, stoves in the chambers, kitchens, &c. they are rowed by twelve men each, and with fuch incredible fwiftness, that in the same day you have the pleasure of a vast variety of prospects, and within the space of a few hours you have the pleasure of seeing a populous city, adorned with magnificent palaces, and the most romantic folitudes, which appear distant from the commerce of mankind, the banks of the C 3 Danube

ET-

ear

it,

ef-

he I

ver

re-

an,

ple

the

oft,

im.

e to

ab-

Danube being charmingly diversified with woods, rocks, mountains covered with vines, fields of corn, large cities and ruins of ancient castles. I saw the great towns of Passau and Lintz, famous for the retreat of the Imperial Court, when Vienna was besieged. This town, which has the honour of being the Emperor's refidence, did not at all answer my expectation, nor ideas of it, being much less than I expected to find it; the ftreets are very close, and so narrow, one cannot observe the fine fronts of the palaces, though many of them very well deferve observation, being truly magnificent. They are all built of fine white stone, and are excessive high. For as the town is too little for the number of the people that defire to live in it, the builders feem to have projected to repair that misfortune, by clapping one town on the top of another, most of the houses being of five, and fome of them fix stories. You may easily imagine that, the streets being so narrow, the rooms are extremely dark, and what is an inconvenicncy

rith

ies,

ent

and

rial

his

the

my lefs

rery

the

of

eing

fine

the

the

ders

foran-

and

afily

the

con-

ncy

veniency much more intolerable in my opinion, there is no house has fo few as five or fix families in it. The apartments of the greatest ladies, and even of the ministers of flate, are divided, but by a partition, from that of a taylor or shoe-maker, and I know no body that has above two floors in any house, one for their own use, and one higher for their fervants. Those that have houses of their own let out the rest of them, to whoever will take them, and thus the great stairs (which are all of stone) are as common and as dirty as the ffreet. 'Tis true, when you have once travelled through them, nothing can be more furprizingly magnificent than the apartments. They are commonly a fuite of eight or ten large rooms, all inlaid, the doors and windows richly carved and gilt, and the furniture fuch as is feldom feen in the palaces of fovereign princes in other countries. Their apartments are adorned with hangings of the finest tapestry of Brussels, prodigious large looking glasses in C4 filver filver frames, fine japan tables, beds, chairs, canopies, and window curtains of the richeft Genoa damask or velvet, almost covered with gold lace or embroidery. All this is made gay by pictures and vaft jars of japan china, and large luftres of rock cryftal. I have already had the honour of being invited to dinner by feveral of the first people of quality, and I must do them the justice to say, the good tafte and magnificence of their tables very well answer to that of their furniture. I have been more than once entertained with different dishes of meat, all served in filver, and well dreffed, the defert proportionable, ferved in the finest china. But the variety and richness of their wines, is what appears the most furprizing. The constant way is, to lay a list of their names upon the plates of the guefts along with the napkins, and I have counted feveral times, to the number of eighteen different forts, all exquisite in their kinds. I was yesterday at Count Schoonbourn, the Viceirs,

ith

ade

na,

al-

in-

ty,

boo

vell

een

ent

vell

in

ness

ur-

lift

efts

ted

lif-

I

the

ce-

Vice-chancellor's garden, where I was invited to dinner. I must own, I never saw a place fo perfectly delightful as the Fauxbourg of Vienna. It is very large, and almost wholly composed of delicious palaces. If the Emperor found it proper to permit the gates of the town to be laid open, that the Fauxbourgs might be joined to it, he would have one of the largest and best built cities in Europe. Count Schoonbourn's villa is one of the most magnificent; the furniture all rich brocades, so well fancied and fitted up, nothing can look more gay and splendid; not to speak of a gallery full of rarities of coral, mother of pearl, and throughout the whole house a profusion of gilding, carving, fine paintings, the most beautiful porcelain, statues of alabaster and ivory, and vast orange and lemon trees in gilt pots. The dinner was perfectly fine and well ordered, and made still more agreeable by the good-humour of the Count. I have not yet been at court, being forced to stay for my gown, gown, without which there is no waiting on the Empress; though I am not without great impatience to see a beauty that has been the admiration of so many different nations. When I have had that honour, I will not fail to let you know my real thoughts, always taking a particular pleasure in communicating them to my dear sister.

LETTER VIII.

g on great

Then

o let ng à

m to

To Mr. P--.

Vienna, Sept. 14; O.S

PERHAPS you'll laugh at me, for thanking you very gravely for all the obliging concern you express for me. 'Tis tertain that I may, if I please, take the fine things you fay to me for wit and raillery, and it may be, it would be taking them right. But I never, in my life, was half fo well disposed to take you in earnest, as I am at present, and that distance which makes the continuation of your friendship improbable, has very much increased my faith in it. I find that I have (as well as the rest of my fex) whatever face I set on't, a strong disposition to believe in miracles. Don't fancy, however, that I am infected by the air of these popish countries; I have, indeed, so far wandered from the discipline of the church of England, as to have been last Sunday at the opera, which was performed in the garden of the Favorita, Favorita, and I was fo much pleafed with it. T have not yet repented my feeing it. Nothing of that kind ever was more magnificent; and I can easily believe, what I am told, that the decorations and habits cost the Emperor thirty thousand pounds sterling. The stage was built over a very large canal, and at the beginning of the second act, divided into two parts, difcovering the water, on which there immediately came from different parts, two fleets of little gilded vessels, that gave the reprefentation of a naval fight. It is not easy to imagine the beauty of this scene, which I took particular notice of. But all the re perfectly fine in their kind. The flory of the opera was the Enchantment of Alcina, which gives opportunities for great variety of machines and changes of the scenes, which are performed with a furprizing swiftness. The theatre is fo large that 'tis hard to carry the eye to the end of it, and the habits in the utmost magnificence to the number of one hundred and eight. No house could hold such large decorations;

th it,

No-

cent:

that peror

stage

at the two

there

two

e re-

fy to

took were

the

hich

ines

med

re is

the

nifi-

ght.

ns;

but

but the ladies all fitting in the open air. exposes them to great inconveniences; for there is but one canopy for the imperial family: and the first night it was represented, a heavy shower of rain happening, the opera was broke off, and the company crouded away in fuch confusion, that I was almost squeezed to death .- But if their operas are thus delightful, their comedies are in as high a degree ridiculous. They had but one play-house, where I had the curiofity to go to a German comedy, and was very glad it happened to be the flory of Amphitrion. As that subject has been already handled by a Latin, French, and English poet, I was curious to fee what an Austrian author would make of it. I understood enough of that language to comprehend the greatest part of it, and besides I took with me a lady that had the goodness to explain to me every word. The way is to take a box which holds four, for yourfelf and company. The fixed price is a gold ducat. I thought the house very low and dark; but I confess the comedy admirably Favorita, and I was fo much pleased with it, I have not yet repented my feeing it. Nothing of that kind ever was more magnificent; and I can easily believe, what I am told, that the decorations and habits cost the Emperor thirty thousand pounds sterling. The stage was built over a very large canal, and at the beginning of the second act, divided into two parts, discovering the water, on which there immediately came from different parts, two fleets of little gilded vessels, that gave the reprefentation of a naval fight. It is not easy to imagine the beauty of this scene, which I took particular notice of. But all the re were perfectly fine in their kind. The flory of the opera was the Enchantment of Alcina, which gives opportunities for great variety of machines and changes of the scenes, which are performed with a furprizing swiftness. The theatre is fo large that 'tis hard to carry the eye to the end of it, and the habits in the utmost magnificence to the number of one hundred and eight. No house could hold such large decorations;

but the ladies all fitting in the open air, exposes them to great inconveniences; for there is but one canopy for the imperial family; and the first night it was represented, a heavy shower of rain happening, the opera was broke off, and the company crouded away in fuch confusion, that I was almost squeezed to death .- But if their operas are thus delightful, their comedies are in as high a degree ridiculous. They had but one play-house, where I had the curiofity to go to a German comedy, and was very glad it happened to be the flory of Amphitrion. As that subject has been already handled by a Latin, French, and English poet, I was curious to fee what an Austrian author would make of it. I understood enough of that language to comprehend the greatest part of it, and befides I took with me a lady that had the goodness to explain to me every word. The way is to take a box which holds four, for yourfelf and company. The fixed price is a gold ducat. I thought the house very low and dark; but I confess the comedy admirably admirably recompensed that defect. I never laughed so much in my life. It begun with Jupiter's falling in love out of a peep-hole in the clouds, and ended with the birth of Hercules. But what was most pleasant was the use Jupiter made of his metamorphosis, for you no fooner faw him under the figure of Amphitrion, but instead of flying to Alcmena, with the raptures Mr. Dryden puts into his mouth, he fends for Amphitrion's taylor, and cheats him of a laced coat, and his banker of a bag of money, a jew of a diamond ring, and bespeaks a great supper in his name; and the greatest part of the comedy turns upon poor Amphitrion's being tormented by these people for their debts. Mercury uses Sofia in the same manner. But I could not eafily pardon the liberty the poet has taken of larding his play with, not only indecent expressions, but such gross words as I don't think our mob would fuffer from a mountebank. Besides, the two Sofias very fairly let down their breeches in the direct view of the boxes, which were full of people of the first rank, that seemed very well pleased with their entertainment, and assured me this was a celebrated piece. I shall conclude my letter with this remarkable relation, very well worthy the serious consideration of Mr. Collier. I won't trouble you with sarewell compliments, which I think generally as impertinent, as curtisses at leaving the room when the visit had been too long already.

LETTER IX.

To the Countess of-

Vienna, Sept. 14, O. 8.

THOUGH I have fo lately troubled you, my dear fifter, with a long letter, yet I will keep my promise in giving you an account of my first going to court. In order to that ceremony, I was squeezed up in a gown, and adorned with a gorget and the other implements thereunto belonging, a dress very inconvenient, but which certainly shows the neck and shape to great advantage. I cannot forbear giving you some description of the fashions here, which are more monstrous and contrary to all common sense and reason, than 'tis possible for you to imagine. They build certain fabrics of gauze on their heads, about a yard high, confisting of three or four stories, fortified with numberless yards of heavy ribbon.

bon. The foundation of this structure is a thing they call a Bourlé, which is exactly of the same shape and kind, but about four times as big as those rolls our prudent milk-maids make use of to fix their pails upon. This machine they cover with their own hair, which they mix with a great deal of false, it being a particular beauty to have their heads too large to go into a moderate tub. Their hair is prodigiously powdered to conceal the mixture. and fet out with three or four rows of bodkins (wonderfully large, that flick out two or three inches from their hair) made of diamonds, pearls, red, green, and yellow stones, that it certainly requires as much art and experience to carry the load upright, as to dance upon May-day with the garland. Their whalebone petticoats outdo ours by feveral yards circumference, and cover some acres of ground. You may eafily suppose how this extraordinary dress fets off and improves the natural ugliness, with which God Almighty has been pleased to endow them, generally speaking. Even the Vol. I. lovely lovely Empress herself, is obliged to comply, in some degree, with these absurd fashions, which they would not quit for all the world. I had a private audience (according to ceremony) of half an hour, and then all the other ladies were permitted to come and make their court. I was perfectly charmed with the Empress; I cannot however tell you that her features are regular; her eyes are not large, but have a lively look full of fweetness; her complexion the finest I ever faw; her nose and forehead well made, but her mouth has ten thousand charms, that touch the soul. When the smiles, 'tis with a beauty and sweetness, that forces adoration. She has a vast quantity. of fine fair hair; but then her person !- one must speak of it poetically to do it rigid justice; all that the poets have faid of the mien of Juno, the air of Venus, come not up to the truth. The Graces move with her; the famous statue of Medicis was not formed with more delicate proportions; nothing can be added to the beauty of her neck and hands. Till

0

p

p.

I faw

1

1

1.

d

n

1

¢

f

I faw them, I did not believe there were any in nature fo perfect, and I was almost forry that my rank here did not permit me to kiss them; but they are kiffed fufficiently, for every body that waits on her, pays that homage at their entrance, and when they take leave. When the ladies were come in, fhe fat down to Quinze. I could not play at a game I had never feen before, and the ordered me a feat at her right hand, and had the goodness to talk to me very much, with that grace fo natural to her. I expected every moment; when the men were to come in to pay their court; but this drawing room is very different from that of England; no man enters it but the grand mafter, who comes in to advertise the Empress of the approach of the Emperor. His Imperial Majesty did me the honour of speaking to me in a very obliging manner, but he never speaks to any of the other ladies, and the whole passes with a gravity and air of ceremony that has fomething very formal in it. The Empress Amelia, dowager of the late Emperor D 2 Joseph,

Joseph, came this evening to wait on the reigning Empress, followed by the two archduchesses her daughters, who were very agreeable young Princesses. Their Imperial Majesties rose and went to meet her at the door of the room, after which she was seated in an armed chair next the Empress, and in the same manner at fupper, and there the men had the permission of paying their court. The archduchesses sat on chairs with backs without arms. The table was entirely ferved and all the dishes fet on by the Empress's maids of honour, which are twelve young ladies of the first quality. They have no falary, but their chamber at court, where they live in a fort of confinement, not being suffered to go to the affemblies or public places in town, except in compliment to the wedding of a fifter maid, whom the Empress always presents with her picture fet in diamonds. The three first of them are called Ladies of the Key, and wear gold keys by their fides; but what I find most pleasant, is the custom, which obliges them as long as they they live, after they have left the Empress's fervice, to make her some present every year on the day of her feaft. Her Majesty is served by no married women but the Grande Maitresse, who is generally a widow of the first quality, always very old, and is at the same time Groom of the Stole and mother of the maids. The dreffers are not, at all, in the figure they pretend to in England, being looked upon no otherwise than as downright chamber-maids. I had an audience next day of the Empress. mother, a princess of great virtue and goodness, but who piques herself too much on a violent devotion. She is perpetually performing extraordinary acts of penance, without having ever done any thing to deferve them. She has the same number of maids of honour, whom the fuffers to go in colours; but the herfelf never quits her mourning; and fure nothing can be more dismal than the mourning here, even for a brother. There is not the least bit of linen to be feen; all black crape instead of it. The neck, ears, and fide of the face are covered D 3 with with a plaited piece of the same stuff, and the face that peeps out in the midft of it, looks as if it were pilloried. The widows wear, over and above, a crape fore-head cloth, and in this folemn weed, go to all the public places of diversion without scruple. The next day I was to wait on the Empress Amelia, who is now at her palace of retirement, half a mile from the town. I had there the pleasure of feeing a diversion wholly new to me, but which is the common amusement of this court. The Empress herself was seated on a little throne at the end of the fine alley in the garden, and on each fide of her were ranged two parties of her ladies of quality, headed by two young arch duchesses, all dressed in their hair, full of jewels, with fine light guns in their hands, and at proper distances were placed three oval pictures, which were the marks to be fhot at. The first was that of a CUPID, filling 2 bumper of Burgundy, and the motto, "Tis "eafy to be valiant here." The fecond a FORTUNE holding a garland in her hand, the motto,

the

as ver

in ces

lay

is

ile

of

ch

he

ne

nd

ies

ng

of

nd

Cıt.

he

0, motto, "For her whom Fortune favours." The third was a SWORD with a laurel wreath on the point, the motto, " Here is no shame " to the vanquished."-Near the Empress was a gilded trophy wreathed with flowers, and made of little crooks, on which were hung rich Turkish handkerchiefs, tippets, ribbons, laces, &c. for the small prizes. The Empress gave the first with her own hand, which was a fine ruby ring fet round with diamonds in a gold fnuff-box. There was for the second, a little Cupid fet with brilliants, and besides these a fet of fine china for the tea-table, enchased in gold, japan trunks, fans, and many gallantries of the same nature. All the men of quality at Vienna were spectators; but the ladies only had permission to shoot, and the arch-duchess Amelia carried off the first prize. I was very well pleased with having seen this entertainment, and I do not know but it might make as good a figure as the prize shooting in the Eneid, if I could write as well as Virgil. This is the favourite pleasure of the Emperor, and there is rarely a week without some feaft of this kind, which makes the young ladies skilful enough to defend a fort. They laughed very much to see me afraid to handle a gun. My dear sister, you will easily pardon an abrupt conclusion. I believe by this time you are ready to think I shall never conclude at all.

D 4

and

aft

ies

red

ın.

pt

ire

LETTER X.

To the Lady R ---.

Vienna, Sept. 20, 1716. O.S.

I AM extremely rejoiced, but not at all furprifed, at the long, delightful letter, you have had the goodness to send me. I know that you can think of an absent friend even in the midst of a court, and you love to oblige, where you can have no view of a return, and I expect from you that you should love me, and think of me, when you don't fee me. I have compassion for the mortifications, that you tell me befall our little, old friend, and I pity her much more, fince I know, that they are only owing to the barbarous customs of our country. Upon my word, if she were here, the would have no other fault but that of being fomething too young for the fashion, and she has nothing to do but to transplant herself hither about seven years hence, to be again a young young and blooming beauty. I can affure you that wrinkles, or a small stoop in the shoulders, nay even grey hairs, are no objection to the making new conquefts. I know you cannot eafily figure to yourfelf, a young fellow of five and twenty, ogling my Lady S-ff-k with paffion, or preffing to hand the Countess of O-d from an Opera. But fuch are the fights I fee every day, and I don't perceive any body furprized at them but myfelf. A woman, till five and thirty, is only looked upon as a raw girl, and can possibly make no noise in the world till about forty. I don't know what your ladyship may think of this matter, but 'tis a considerable comfort to me to know there is upon earth fuch a paradife for old women, and I am content to be infignificant at prefent, in the defign of returning when I am fit to appear no where elfe. I cannot help lamenting on this occasion, the pitiful case of too many English ladies, long fince retired to prudery and ratafia, who if their stars had luckily conducted hither, would still shine in the u

f

h

f

e

1

n

t

t

N

t

n

f ò

d

e

the first rank of beauties. Besides, that perplexing word reputation, has quite another meaning here than what you give it at London, and getting a lover, is so far from losing, that it is properly getting reputation; ladies being much more respected in regard to the rank of their lovers, than that of their husbands.

But what you will think very odd, the two fects that divide our whole nation of petticoats are utterly unknown in this place. Here are neither Coquettes nor Prudes. No woman . dares appear coquette enough to encourage two lovers at a time. And I have not feen any fuch prudes, as to pretend fidelity to their husbands, who are certainly the best natured fet of people in the world, and look upon their wives' gallants as favourably, as men do upon their deputies, that take the troublesome part of their business off their hands. They have not however the less to do on that account; for they are generally deputies in another place themselves; in one word 'tis the established custom custom for every lady to have two husbands, one that bears the name, and another that performs the duties. And the engagements are so well known, that it would be a downright affront, and publickly refented, if you invited a woman of quality to dinner, without at the same time, inviting her two attendants of lover and husband, between whom she sits in state with great gravity. The sub-marriages generally last twenty years together, and the lady often commands the poor lover's estate, even to the utter ruin of his family. These connections, indeed, are as feldom begun by any real passion, as other matches; for a man makes but an ill figure that is not in some commerce of this nature, and a woman looks out for a lover as foon as fhe is married as part of her equipage, without which she could not be genteel, and the first article of the treaty is establishing the penfion, which remains to the lady, in case the gallant should prove inconstant. This chargeable point of honour, I look upon as the real foundation of fo many wonderful instances of constancy.

S,

at ts

1-u

ıt

ts

ts

S

e

e

S

e

r

flancy. I really know feveral women of the first quality, whose pensions are as well known as their annual rents, and yet no body effeems them the less; on the contrary, their discretion would be called in question if they should be suspected to be mistresses for nothing. A great part of their emulation confifts in trying who shall get most; and having no intrigue at all is fo far a difgrace, that I'll affure you, a lady who is very much my friend here, told me but yesterday, how much I was obliged to her for justifying my conduct in a conversation relating to me, where it was publickly afferted, that I could not possibly have common sense, since I had been in town above a fortnight, and had made no steps towards commencing an amour. My friend pleaded for me, that my flay was uncertain, and she believed that was the cause of my seeming stupidity, and this was all she could find to fay in my justification. But one of the pleasantest adventures I ever met in my life, was last night, and it will give you a just idea, in what a delicate manner the Belles

Belles Paffions are managed in this country. I was at the affembly of the Counters of and the young Count of - leading me down stairs, asked me how long I was to stay at Vienna; I made answer that my flay depended on the Emperor, and it was not in my power to determine it. Well, Madam, (faid he) whether your time here is to be longer or shorter, I think you ought to pass it agreeably, and to that end you must engage in a little affair of the heart .- My heart (answered I gravely enough) does not engage very eafily, and I have no design of parting with it. I see, Madam, (faid he fighing) by the ill nature of that anfwer, I am not to hope for it, which is a great mortification to me that am charmed with you. But, however, I am still devoted to your fervice, and fince I am not worthy of entertaining you myself, do me the honour of letting me know, whom you like best amongst us, and I'll engage to manage the affair entirely to your fatisfaction. You may judge in what manner I should have received this compliment in my own

I

*

n.

it.

d.

T

1

r

r.

e., 5

t

14.

17.

own country; but I was well enough acquainted with the way of this, to know that he really intended me an obligation, and I thanked him with a very grave curtley, for his zeal to ferve me, and only affured him, I had no occasion to make use of it. Thus you see, my dear, that gallantry and good-breeding are as different, in different climates, as morality and religion. Who have the rightest notions of both, we shall never know till the day of judgment, for which great day of eclaircissement, I own there is very little impatience in your, &c. &c.

LETTER XI.

To Mrs. J ***.

Vienna, Sept. 26, O.S. 1716.

I WAS never more agreeably furprized than by your obliging letter. 'Tis a peculiar mark of my esteem that I tell you so, and I can affure you, that if I loved you one grain less than I do, I should be very forry to fee it so diverting as it is. The mortal averfion I have to writing, makes me tremble at the thoughts of a new correspondent, and I believe I disobliged no less than a dozen of my London acquaintance by refufing to hear from them, though I did verily think they intended to fend me very entertaining letters. But I had rather loofe the pleasure of reading several witty things, than be forced to write many stupid ones. Yet in spite of these considerations, I am charmed with the proof of your friendship, and beg a continuation of the same goodness, goodness, though I fear the dulness of this will make you immediately repent of it. It is not from Austria that one can write with vivacity. and I am already infected with the phlegm of the country. Even their amours and their quarrels are carried on with a furprizing temper, and they are never lively, but upon points of ceremony. There, I own, they shew all their paffions, and 'tis not long fince two coaches meeting in a narrow freet at night, the ladies in them not being able to adjust the ceremonial of which should go back, fat there with equal gallantry till two in the morning, and were both fo fully determined to die upon the spot rather than yield, in a point of that importance, that the ffreet would never have been cleared till their deaths, if the Emperor had not fent his guards to part them, and even then they refused to stir, till the expedient could be found out, of taking them both out in chairs, exactly in the same moment. After the ladies were agreed, it was with fome diffi-VOL. I. culty, E 5.

11.

2

lo, ne

to

r-

he

ve

1-m

d

I

ı

y

1

e

culty, that the pass was decided between the two coachmen, no less tenacious of their rank than the ladies. This passion is so omnipotent in the breasts of the women, that even their husbands never die, but they are ready to break their hearts, because that fatal hour puts an end to their rank, no widows having any place at Vienna. The men are not much less touched with this point of honour, and they don't only fcorn to marry, but even to make love to any woman of a family not as illustrious as their own, and the pedigree is much more confidered by them, than either the complexion or features of their mistresses. Happy are the She's that can number amongst their ancestors, Counts of the Empire; they have neither occasion for beauty, money, nor good conduct to get them husbands. 'Tis true as to money, 'tis feldom any advantage to the man they marry; the laws of Austria confine the woman's portion to two thousand florins (about two hundred pounds English) and whatever they

the

nk

ent

eir

eak

an

ace

ch-

n't

to 25 on-or

ors,

OC-

ua

ey,

hey

WO-

out

rei

hey

they have beside, remains in their own possesfion and disposal. Thus here are many ladies much richer than their husbands, who are however obliged to allow them pin money agreeable to their quality; and I attribute to this confiderable branch of prerogative, the liberty that they take upon other occasions. I am fure you, that know my laziness and extreme indifference on this subject, will pity me, intangled amongst all these ceremonies, which are a wonderful burden to me, though I am the envy of the whole town, having by their own customs the pass before them all. They, indeed, fo revenge upon the poor Envoys, this great respect shewed to Ambassadors, that (with all my indifference) I should be very uneafy to fuffer it. Upon days of ceremony they have no entrance at court, and on other days must content themselves with walking after every foul, and being the very last taken notice of. But I must write a volume to let you know all the ceremonies, and I have already faid too much on fo dull a subject, which however employs the whole care of the people here. I need not after this, tell you how agreeably time slides away with me, you know as well as I do the taste of,

E 2

ready

Yours, &c. &c.

h

le

W

W

T

LETTER XII.

To the Lady X ----

Vienna, Oct. 1, O.S. 1716.

YOU desire me, Madam, to send you some accounts of the customs here, and at the fame time a description of Vienna. I am always willing to obey your commands, but you must upon this occasion take the will for the deed. If I should undertake to tell you all the particulars in which the manners here differ from ours, I must write a whole quire of the dullest stuff that ever was read, or printed without being read. Their drefs agrees with the French or English in no one article, but wearing petticoats. They have many fashions peculiar to themselves; they think it indecent for a widow ever to wear green or rose colour, but all the other gayest colours at her own difcretion. The affemblies here are the only regular diversion, the operas being always at E 3 court, court, and commonly on fome particular occa-Madam Rabutin, has the affembly constantly every night at her house, and the other ladies, whenever they have a mind to display the magnificence of their apartments, or oblige a friend by complimenting them on the day of their faint, they declare, that on fuch a day the affembly shall be at their house in honour of the feast of the Count or Countess-such a one. These days are called days of Gala, and all the friends or relations of the lady, whose Saint it is, are obliged to appear in their best cloaths and all their jewels. The mistress of the house takes no particular notice of any body, nor returns any body's vifit; and, whoever pleases, may go, without the formality of being presented. The company are entertained with ice in feveral forms, winter and fummor; afterwards they divide into feveral parties of ombre, piquett, or conversation, all games of hazard being forbid.

ca-

on-her

lay

lige of day

our

uch

ala,

dy,

neir

ress

any ho-

y of

inım-

ties

mes

faw

I saw t'other day the Gala for Count Altheim, the Emperor's savourite, and never in my life saw so many fine cloaths ill fancied. They embroider the richest gold stuffs, and provided they can make their cloaths expensive enough, that is all the taste they shew in them. On other days the general dress is a scarf, and what you please under it.

But now I am speaking of Vienna, I am fure you expect I should say something of the convents; they are of all forts and fizes, but I am best pleased with that of St. Lawrence, where the ease and neatness they feem to live with, appears to me much more edifying than those stricter orders, where perpetual pennance and naffiness must breed discontent and wretchedness. The nuns are all of quality. I think there are to the number of fifty. They have each of them, a little cell perfectly clean, the walls of which are covered with pictures, more or less fine, according to their quality. A long white stone gallery runs by all of them, E 4 furnished furnished with the pictures of exemplary fifters; the chapel is extremely neat and richly adorned. But I could not forbear laughing at their shewing me a wooden head of our Saviour, which, they affured me, spoke, during the siege of Vienna; and, as a proof of it, bid me mark his mouth, which had been open ever fince. Nothing can be more becoming than the dress of these It is a white robe, the fleeves of which are turned up with fine white callico, and their head-dress the same, excepting a small veil of black crape that falls behind. They have a lower fort of ferving nuns, that wait on them as their chamber-maids. They receive all visits of women, and play at ombre in their chambers with permission of their Abbess, which is very eafy to be obtained. I never faw an old woman fo good-natured; she is near fourfcore, and yet shews very little fign of decay, being still lively and chearful. She careffed me as if I had been her daughter, giving me some pretty things of her own work, and fweetmeats fweetmeats in abundance. The grate is not of the most rigid; it is not very hard to put a head through; and I don't doubt but a man, a little more flender than ordinary, might fqueeze in his whole person. The young Count of Salamis, came to the grate, while I was there, and the Abbess gave him her hand to kifs. But I was furprized to find here, the only beautiful young woman I have feen at Vienna, and, not only beautiful but genteel, witty and agreeable, of a great family, and who had been the admiration of the town. I could not forbear shewing my surprize at seeing a nun like her. She made me a thousand obliging compliments, and defired me to come often. It would be an infinite pleasure to me, (faid fhe, fighing) but I avoid, with the greatest care, seeing any of my former acquaintance; and whenever they come to our convent, I lock myself in my cell. I observed tears come into her eyes, which touched me exremely, and I began to talk to her in that strain of tender pity pity she inspired me with; but she would not own to me that she is not perfectly happy. I have fince endeavoured to learn the real cause of her retirement, without being able to get any other account, but that every body was furprized at it, and nobody gueffed the reason. I have been feveral times to fee her; but it gives me too much melancholy to fee fo agreeable a young creature buried alive. I am not furprized that nuns have so often inspired violent passions; the pity one naturally feels for them, when they feem worthy of another deftiny, making an easy way for yet more tender fentiments. I never in my life had so little charity for the Roman Catholic religion, as fince I see the misery it occasions: so many poor unhappy women! and then the gross superstition of the common people, who are some or other of them, day and night, offering bits of candle to the wooden figures, that are fet up almost in every street. The processions I fee very often are pageantry, as offensive and

ot

e et

S

t

and apparently contradictory to common fense, as the pagods of China. God knows whether it be the womanly spirit of contradiction that works in me, but there never, before, was such zeal against popery in the heart of,

Dear Madam, &c. &c.

LETTE-R XIII.

To Mr. ---.

Vienna, Oct. 10, O.S. 1716.

I DESERVE not all the reproaches you make me. If I have been some time without answering your letter, it is not, that I don't know how many thanks are due to you for it; or that I am stupid enough to prefer any amusements to the pleasure of hearing from you; but after the professions of efteem you have so obligingly made me, I cannot help delaying, as long as I can, shewing you, that you are mistaken. If you are sincere, when you fay, you expect to be extremely entertained by my letters, I ought to be mortified at the disappointment that I am fure you will receive, when you hear from me; tho' I have done my best endeavours to find out something worth writing to you. I have feen every thing that was to be feen with a very diligent curiofity.

fity. Here are some fine villas, particularly, the late Prince of Lichenstein's : but the statues are all modern, and the pictures not of the first hands. 'Tis true, the Emperor has forme of great value. I was yesterday to see the repofitory, which they call his Treasure, where they feem to have been more diligent in amafing a great quantity of things, than in the choice of them. I spent above five hours there, and yet there were very few things that stopped me long to confider them. But the number is prodigious, being a very long gallery filled, on both fides, and five large rooms. There is a vast quantity of paintings, amongst which are many fine miniatures, but the most valuable pictures are a few of Corregio, those of Titian being at the Favorita.

e-

ne

t,

0

The cabinet of jewels did not appear to me fo rich as I expected to see it. They shewed me here a cup, about the fize of a tea-dish, of one entire emerald, which they had so particular a respect for, that only the Emperor has the liberty of touching it. There is a large cabinet full of curiofities of clock-work, only one of which I thought worth observing, that was a craw-fish with all the motions so natural, that it was hard to distinguish it from the life.

The next cabinet was a large collection of Agates, some of them extremely beautiful and of an uncommon fize, and feveral vafes of Lapis Lazuli. I was surprized to see the cabinet of medals fo poorly furnished, I did not remark one of any value, and they are kept in a most ridiculous disorder. As to the Antiques, very few of them deserve that name. Upon my faying they were modern, I could not forbear laughing at the answer of the profound antiquary that shewed them, that " they were ancient enough, for to his knowledge they had been there these forty years;" but the next cabinet diverted me yet better, being nothing else but a parcel of wax babies, and toys in ivory, very well worthy to be presented to children of five years

ge

ly

g,

fo

m

of

d

of

years old. Two of the rooms were wholly filled with these trifles of all kinds, set in jewels, amongst which I was defired to observe a crucifix, that they affured me had spoke very wisely to the Emperor Leopold. I won't trouble you with a catalogue of the rest of the lumber, but I must not forget to mention, a small piece of loadstone that held up an anchor of steel too heavy for me to lift. This is what I thought tye most curious in the whole treasure. There are some few heads of ancient statues; but several of them are defaced by modern additions. I foresee that you will be very little satisfied with this letter, and I dare hardly ask you, to be good-natured enough to charge the dulness of it, on the barrenness of the subject, and to overlook the stupidity of

Your, &c. &c.

LETTER XIV.

To the Countess of ----

Prague, Nov. 17, O.S. 1716.

I HOPE my dear fifter wants no new proofs of my fincere affection for her; but I am sure if you'do, I could not give you a stronger than writing at this time, after three days, or more properly speaking, three nights and days, hard post travelling .- The kingdom of Bohemia is the most desert of any I have seen in Germany. The villages are fo poor, and the post-houses so miserable, that clean straw and fair water are bleffings not always to be met with, and better accommodation not to be hoped for. Though I carried my own bed with me, I could not fometimes find a place to fet it up in; and I rather chose to travel all night, as cold as it is, wraped up in my furs, than go into the common stoves, which are filled with a mixture of all forts of ill fcents.

This

v

w

di

n

L

ce

cri

T

an

to

V

5.

no t I

er

s,

of

n

d

N

e

e

t

This town was once the royal feat of the Bohemian Kings, and is still the capital of the kingdom. There are yet some remains of its former splendour, being one of the largest towns in Germany, but, for the most part, old built and thinly inhabited, which makes the houses very cheap. Those people of quality who cannot easily bear the expence of Vienna, chuse to reside here, where they have assemblies, music, and all other diversions, (those of a court excepted) at very moderate rates, all things being here in great abundance, especially, the best wild fowl I ever tasted. I have already been visited by some of the most considerable ladies, whose relations I know at Vienna. They are dressed after the fashions there, after the manner that the people at Exeter imitate those of London; that is, their imitation is more excessive than the original. 'Tis not easy to defcribe what extraordinary figures they make. The person is so much lost between head-dress and petticoat, that they have as much occasion to write upon their backs, "This is a woman," Vol. I. F for, for the information of travellers, as every fignpost painter had to write, "This is a Bear." I will not forget to write to you again from Dresden and Leipzig, being much more solicitous to content your curiosity, than to indulge my own repose.

I am, &c.

LETTER XV.

nr."

om

ci-

lge

ċ.

To the Countess of ----

Leipzig, Nov. 21, O.S. 1716.

I BELIEVE, dear fifter, you will cafily forgive my not writing to you from Drefden, as I promised, when I tell you, that I never went out of my chaife from Prague to this place. You may imagine how heartily I was tired with twenty-four hours post-travelling, without sleep or refreshment (for I can never sleep in a coach however fatigued.) We passed by moon-shine, the frightful precipices that divide Bohemia from Saxony, at the bottom of which runs the river Elbe; but I cannot fay, that I had reason to fear drowning in it, being perfeetly convinced, that in case of a tumble, it was utterly impossible to come alive to the bottom. In many places the road is fo narrow, that I could not discern an inch of space between the wheels and the precipice. Yet I was

fo

fo good a wife not to wake Mr. W-y, who was fast asleep by my side, to make him share in my fears, fince the danger was unavoidable, till I perceived by the bright light of the moon, our postillions nodding on horseback, while the horses were on a full gallop. Then indeed I thought it very convenient to call out to defire them to look where they were going. My ealling waked Mr W---y, and he was much more furprifed than myfelf at the fituation we were in, and affured me that he passed the Alps five times in different places, without ever having gone a road fo dangerous. I have been told fince, that 'tis common to find the bodies of travellers in the Elbe, but thank God that was not our deftiny, and we came fafe to Drefden, fo much tired with fear and fatigue, it was not possible for me to compose myself to write. After paffing these dreadful rocks, Dresden appeared to me a wonderfully agreeable fituation, in a fine large plain on the banks of the Elbe. I was very glad to stay there 2 day to rest myself. The town is the neatest I have

ho

are

le,

n, ile

ed

ire

11-ch

we ps

rer

en

es

at

to

c,

to

S,

e

CS

2

I

e

have feen in Germany; most of the houses are new built; the Elector's palace is very handsome, and his repository full of curiosities of different kinds, with a collection of medals very much esteemed. Sir ----, our King's Envoy, came to fee me here, and Madam de L---, whom I knew in London, when her husband was minister to the King of Poland there. She offered me all things in her power to entertain me, and brought some ladies with her, whom she presented to me. The Saxon ladies refemble the Austrian no more, than the Chinese do those of London; they are very genteely dreffed after the English and French modes, and have, generally, pretty faces, but they are the most determined Minaudieres in the whole world. They would think it a mortal fin against good breeding, if they either spoke or moved in a natural manner. They all affect a little foft lifp, and a pretty pitty-pat flep; which female frailties ought, however, to be forgiven them in favour of their civility F 3 and great deal of reason to praise.

The Countess of Cozelle is kept prisoner in a melancholy caftle, fome leagues from hence, and I cannot forbear telling you what I heard of her; because it seems to me very extraordinary, though I foresee I shall swell my letter to the fize of a pacquet.—She was mistress to the King of Poland (Elector of Saxony) with fo absolute a dominion over him, that never any lady had fo much power in that court. They tell a pleasant story of his Majesty's first declaration of love, which he made in a visit to her, bringing in one hand a bag of a hundred thousand crowns, and in the other a horse-shoe, which he snapped asunder before her face, leaving her to draw the confequences of fuch remarkable proofs of strength and liberality. I know not which charmed her most, but she consented to leave her husband, and to give herfelf up to him entirely, being divorced publicly, in fuch a manner, as by their laws permit

e s

in

ce,

ard di-

ter

S

y)

at

at

permits either party to marry again. God knows whether it was at this time, or in some other fond fit, but 'tis certain the King had the weakness to make her a formal contract of marriage; which, though it could fignify nothing during the life of the Queen, pleased her so well, that fhe could not be contented, without telling it to all the people the faw, and giving herself the airs of a Queen. Men endure every thing while they are in love; but when the excess of passion was cooled by long possession, his Majesty begun to reslect on the ill consequences of leaving fuch a paper in her hands. and defired to have it reftored to him. But the rather chose to endure all the most violent effects of his anger than give it up; and though the is one of the richest and most avaricious ladies of her country, the has refused the offer of the continuation of a large pension, and the fecurity of a vaft fum of money the has amaffed. and has, at last, provoked the King to confine her person to a castle, where she endures all the terrers of a strait imprisonment, and remains still inslexible either to threats or promises. Her violent passions have brought her indeed into sits, which it is supposed will soon put an end to her life. I cannot forbear having some compassion for a woman, that suffers for a point of honour, however mistaken, especially in a country where points of honour are not over scrupulously observed among ladies.

F 4

the

I could have wished Mr. W——'s business had permitted him a longer stay at Dresden.

Perhaps I am partial to a town where they profess the protestant religion, but every thing seemed to me with quite another air of politeness, than I have found in other places. Leipsig, where I am at present, is a town very considerable for its trade, and I take this opportunity of buying page's liveries, gold stuffs for myself, &c. all things of that kind being at least double the price at Vienna, partly because

re-

ro-

her

on

ng

ra

ly

of

S

of the excessive customs, and partly through want of genius tnd industry in the people, who make no one fort of thing there, fo that the ladies are obliged to fend even for their shoes out of Saxony. The fair here is one of the most confiderable in Germany, and the refort of all the people of quality, as well as of the merchants. This is also a fortified town, but I avoid ever mentioning fortifications, being fensible that I know not how to speak of them. I am the more easy under my ignorance, when I reflect that I am fure you'll willingly forgive the omission; for if I made you the most exact description of all the ravelins and bastions I see in my travels, I dare swear you would ask me what is a ravelin? and what is a bastion?

Adieu, my dear Sister.

LETTER XVI.

To the Countess of-

Brunswick, Nov. 3 O.S. 1716. I AM just come to Brunswick, a very old town, but which has the advantage of being the capital of the Duke of Wolfenbuttle's dominions, a family (not to speak of its ancient honours) illustrious, by having its younger branch on the throne of England, and having given two Empresses to Germany. I have not forgot to drink your health here in Mum, which I think very well deferves its reputation of being the best in the world. This letter is the third I have wrote to you during my journey; and I declare to you, that if you don't fend me immediately a full and true account of all the changes and chances amongst our London acquaintance, I will not write you any description of Hanover, (where I hope to be to-night) though I know you have more curiofity to hear of that place than any other.

LETTER XVII.

To the Countess of B----.

Hanover, Nov. 25, O.S. 1716, 5.

1

of

e's

nŧ

er

ıg

ot

h

ıf

e

letter but the day before I left Vienna, though, by the date, I ought to have had it much sooner; but nothing was ever worse regulated than the post in most parts of Germany. I can assure you, the packet at Prague was behind my chaise, and in that manner conveyed to Dresden, so that the secrets of half the country were at my mercy, if I had had any curiosity for them. I would not longer delay my thanks for yours, though the number of my acquaintances here, and my duty of attending at court, leaves me hardly any time to dispose of. I am extremely pleased that I can tell you, without flattery or partiality, that our young Prince* has all the accomplishments that 'tis possible to have at his age, with an air of sprightliness

^{*} The Father of his present Majesty.

and understanding, and something so very engaging and easy in his behaviour, that he needs not the advantage of his rank to appear charming. I had the honour of a long conversation with him last night before the King came in. His governor retired on purpose (as he told me afterwards) that I might make some judgment of his genius, by hearing him speak without constraint; and I was surprized at the quickness and politeness, that appeared in every thing he said, joined to a person persectly agreeable, and the sine sair hair of the Princess.

This town is neither large nor handsome; but the palace is capable of holding a much greater court than that of St. James's. The King has had the goodness to appoint us a lodging in one part of it, without which we should have been very ill accommodated; for the vast number of English crouds the town so much, 'tis very good luck to get one sorry room in a miserable tavern. I dined to day with the Portuguese Ambassador, who thinks himself

en-

eds

mon

in.

me nt

ut

k-

g

٠,

himself very happy to have two wretched parlours in an inn. I have now made the Tour of Germany, and cannot help observing a confiderable difference between travelling here and in England. One sees none of those fine seats of noblemen, fo common amongst us, nor any thing like a country gentleman's house, though they have many situations perfectly fine. But the whole people are divided into absolute sovereignties, where all the riches and magnificence are at court, or into communities of merchants, fuch as Nurenburg and Frankfort, where they live always in town for the convenience of trade. The King's company of French comedians play here every night. They are very well dreffed, and some of them not ill actors. His Majesty dines and sups constantly in public. The court is very numerous, and his affability and goodness makes it one of the most agreeable places in the world.

Dear Madam,

Your L. &c. &c.

LET-

LETTER XVIII.

To the Lady R ---.

Hanover, Oct. 1, O. S. 1716.

I AM very glad, my dear Lady R---, that you have been so well pleased, as you tell me, at the report of my returning to England; though, like other pleasures, I can affure you it has no real foundation. I hope you know me enough to take my word against any report concerning me. 'Tis true, as to distance of place, I am much nearer to London than I was fome weeks ago; but as to the thoughts of a return, I never was farther off in my life. I own, I could with great joy indulge the pleafing hopes of feeing you and the very few others that share my esteem; but while Mr. W --- is determined to proceed in his defign, I am determined to follow him.-I am running on upon my own affairs, that is to fay, I am going to write very dully, as most peopledo, when 6.

dy

ed,

ng

I

1 rd

e,

to

to 19 y

e

S.

when they write of themselves. I will make hafte to change the disagreeable subject, by telling you, that I am now got into the region of beauty. All the women have, literally, rofy cheeks, fnowy foreheads and bosoms, jet eyebrows, and fearlet lips, to which they generally add coal-black hair. Those perfections never leave them, till the hour of their deaths, and have a very fine effect by candle-light; but I could wish they were handsome with a little more variety. They refemble one another as much as Mrs. Salmon's court of Great-Britain, and are in as much danger of melting. away, by too near approaching the fire, which they, for that reason, carefully avoid, though 'tis now fuch excessive cold weather, that I believe they fuffer extremely by that piece of felf-denial. The fnow is already very deep, and the people begin to flide about in their Traineaux. This is a favourite diversion all over Germany. They are little machines fixed upon a fledge, that hold a lady and a gentleman, and and are drawn by one horse. The gentleman has the honour of driving, and they move with a prodigious swiftness. The lady, the horse and the Traineau, are all as fine as they can be made, and when there are many of them together, 'tis a very agreeable show. At Vienna, where all pieces of magnificence are carried to excess, there are fometimes machines of this kind, that cost five or fix hundred pounds English. The Duke of Wolfenbuttle is now at this court; you know he is nearly related to our King, and uncle to the reigning Empress, who is, I believe, the most beautiful princess upon earth. She is now with child, which is all the confolation of the Imperial Court for the loss of the Archduke. I took my leave of her the day before I left Vienna, and she begun to speak to me, with fo much grief and tenderness of the death of that young prince, I had much ado to withhold my tears. You know that I am not at all partial to people for their titles; but I own, that I love that charming Princess (if I may use so familiar an expression) and if I had not, I should

lan

ith

ind

de, er,

re

ſs,

at

ne

d

f

I should have been very much moved at the tragical end of an only son, born, after being so long desired, and at length killed by want of good management, weaning him in the beginning of the winter. Adieu, dear Lady R—, continue to write to me, and believe none of your goodness is lost upon

Yours, &c.

G

LET-

LETTER XIX.

To the Countess of -

Blankenburg, Oct. 17, O.S. 1716.

6

I RECEIVED yours, dear fifter, the very day I left Hanover. You may easily imagine I was then in too great a hurry to answer it; but you see I take the first opportunity of doing myself that pleasure. I came here the 15th, very late at night, after a terrible journey, in the worst roads and weather that ever poor traveller suffered. I have taken this little fatigue, merely to oblige the reigning Empress, and carry a message from her Imperial Majesty to the Duchess of Blankenburg, her mother, who is a Princess of great address and good breeding, and may be still called a fine woman. It was fo late when I came to this town, I did not think it proper to diffurb the Duke and Duchess with the news of my arrival;

arrival; fo I took up my quarters in a miserable inn; but as foon as I had fent my compliments to their Highnesses, they immediately fent me their own coach and fix horses, which had however enough to do to draw us up the very high hill on which the castle is situated. The Duchess is extremely obliging to me, and this little court is not without its diversions. The Duke taillys at Basset every night, and the Duchess tells me, she is so well pleased with my company, that it makes her play lefs than she used to do. I should find it very difficult to steal time to write, if she was not now at church, where I cannot wait on her, not understanding the language enough to pay my devotions in it. You will not forgive me, if I do not fay fomething of Hanover; I cannot tell you that the town is either large or magnificent. The opera-house, which was built by the late elector, is much finer than that of Vi-I was very forry that the ill weather did not permit me to fee Hernhausen in all its beauty; but in spite of the snow, I thought G 2 the

n

ζ,

S

to

rb

ny

ıl;

LETTER XIX.

To the Countess of

Blankenburg, Oct. 17, O.S. 1716.

I RECEIVED yours, dear fifter, the very day I left Hanover. You may eafily imagine I was then in too great a hurry to answer it; but you see I take the first opportunity of doing myself that pleasure. I came here the 15th, very late at night, after a terrible journey, in the worst roads and weather that ever poor traveller suffered. I have taken this little fatigue, merely to oblige the reigning Empress, and carry a message from her Imperial Majesty to the Duchess of Blankenburg, her mother, who is a Princess of great address and good breeding, and may be still called a fine woman. It was so late when I came to this town, I did not think it proper to disturb the Duke and Duchess with the news of my arrivals arrival; fo I took up my quarters in a miserable inn; but as foon as I had fent my compliments to their Highnesses, they immediately fent me their own coach and fix horses, which had however enough to do to draw us up the very high hill on which the castle is situated. The Duchefs is extremely obliging to me, and this little court is not without its diversions. The Duke taillys at Basset every night, and the Duchess tells me, she is so well pleased with my company, that it makes her play lefs than she used to do. I should find it very difficult to steal time to write, if she was not now at church, where I cannot wait on her, not understanding the language enough to pay my devotions in it. You will not forgive me, if I do not fay fomething of Hanover; I cannot tell you that the town is either large or magnificent. The opera-house, which was built by the late elector, is much finer than that of Vienna. I was very forry that the ill weather did not permit me to fee Hernhausen in all its beauty; but in spite of the snow, I thought G 2 the

I

15

n

ıg

e-

g,

(s

2

to

ırb

my

al;

the gardens very fine. I was particularly furprized at the vast number of orange trees, much larger than any I have ever feen in England, though this climate is certainly colder. But I had more reason to wonder, that night at the King's table, to see a present from a gentleman of this country, of two large bafkets full of ripe oranges and lemons of different forts, many of which were quite new to me; and what I thought worth all the rest, two ripe Ananasses, which, to my taste, are a fruit perfectly delicious. You know they are naturally the growth of Brazil, and I could not imagine how they came here but by enchantment. Upon enquiry, I learnt that they have brought their stoves to such perfection, they lengthen their fummer as long as they pleafe, giving to every plant the degree of heat it would receive from the fun in its native foil. The effect is very near the same: I am surprized we do not practice in England fo useful This reflection leads me to an invention. confider our obstinacy in shaking with cold five five months in the year, rather than make use of stoves, which are certainly one of the greatest conveniences of life. Besides, they are so far from spoiling the form of a room, that they add very much to the magnificence of it, when they are painted and gilt, as they are at Vienna, or at Dresden, where they are often in the shapes of china jars, statues or sine cabinets, so naturally represented, that they are not to be distinguished. If ever I return, in desiance to the sashion, you shall certainly see one in the chamber of,

Dear Sifter, Your, &c.

I will write often, fince you defire it; but I must beg you to be a little more particular in yours; you fancy me at forty miles distance, and forget, that, after so long an absence, I can't understand hints.

LETTER XX.

To the Lady ----.

Vienna, Jan. 1, O.S. 1717. I HAVE just received here at Vienna, your ladyship's compliments on my return to England, fent me from Hanover. You fee, madam, all things that are afferted with confidence, are not abfolutely true; and that you have no fort of reason to complain of me for making my defigned return a mystery to you, when you fay all the world are informed of it. You may tell all the world in my name, that they are never fo well informed in my affairs as I am myself, that I am very positive I am at this time at Vienna, where the carnival is begun, and all forts of diversions are carried to the greatest height, except that of masquing, which is never permitted during a war with the Turks. The balls are in public places, where the men pay a gold ducat at entrance, but the ladies nothing. I am told that these houses get sometimes a thousand ducats in a night. They are very magnificently furnished, and the music good, if they had not that detestable custom of mixing hunting horns with it, that almost deafen the company. But that noise is so agreeable here, they never make a concert without them. The ball always concludes with English country dances, to the number of thirty or forty couple, and fo ill danced, that there is very little pleasure in them. They know but half a dozen, and they have danced them over and over these fifty years. I would fain have taught them fome new ones, but I found it would be fome months labour to make them comprehend them. Last night there was an Italian comedy acted at court. The scenes were pretty, but the comedy itself fuch intolerable low farce, without either wit or humour, that I was furprized how all the court could fit there attentively for four hours together. No women are suffered to act on the ftage, and the men dressed, like them, were fuch aukward figures, they very much added to the ridicule of the spectacle. What compleated pleated the diversion was the excessive cold, which was fo great I thought I should have died there. It is now the very extremity of the winter here; the Danube is entirely frozen, and the weather not to be supported without stoves and furs; but, however, the air fo clear, almost every body is well, and colds not half so common as in England. I am perfuaded there cannot be a purer air, nor more wholesome than that of Vienna. The plenty and excellence of all forts of provisions are greater here than in any place I ever was before, and 'tis not very expensive to keep a fplendid table. 'Tis really a pleasure to pass through the markets, and fee the abundance of what we should think rarities, of fowls and venison, that are daily brought in from Hungary and Bohemia. They want nothing but shell-fish, and are so fond of oysters, that they have them fent from Venice, and eat them very greedily, stink or not stink. Thus I obey your commands, Madam, in giving you an account of Vienna, though I know you will

d,

ve

of 0-

h.

fo

ot

-12

re

ty

ire'

e-

ass

of

nd

nut

ey

m

I

ou

ou

ill

will not be fatisfied with it. You chide me for my laziness in not telling you a thousand agreeable and furprizing things, that you fay you are fure I have feen and heard. Upon my word, Madam, 'tis my regard to truth, and not laziness, that I do not entertain you with as many prodigies as other travellers use to divert their readers with. I might eafily pick up wonders in every town I pass through, or tell you a long feries of popish miracles, but I cannot fancy that there is any thing new in letting you know that priefts will lie, and the mob believe, all the world over. Then as for news, as you are so inquisitive about, how can it be entertaining to you (that don't know the people) that the Prince of -- has forfaken the Counters of ---? or that the Prince fuch-aone, has an intrigue with Count such-a-one? Would you have me write novels, like the Countess of D'--? and is it not better to tell you a plain truth,

That I am, &c.

LET-

LETTER XXI.

To the Counters of ---

Vienna, Jan. 16, O.S. 1717.

I AM now, dear fifter, to take leave of you for a long time, and of Vienna for ever, defigning, to-morrow, to begin my journey through Hungary in spite of the excessive cold, and deep snows, which is enough. to damp a greater courage than I am miftress of. But my principle of passive obedience, carries me through every thing. I have had my audience of leave of the Empress. His Imperial Majesty was pleased to be present when I waited on the reigning Empress, and after a very obliging conversation, both their Imperial Majesties invited me to take Vienna in my road back; but I have no thoughts of enduring over again, so great a fatigue. I delivered a letter from the Duchess of Blankenburg. I staid but a few days at that court, though her Highnels preffed 7.

ake

ma

ny

X-

gh.

of.

es

u-

al

d

y

.

d

1

pressed me very much to stay; and when I left her, engaged me to write to her. I wrote you a long letter from thence, which I hope you have received, though you don't mention it; but I believe I forgot to tell you one curiofity in all the German courts, which I cannot forbear taking notice of: All the Princes keep favourite dwarfs. The Emperor and Empress have two of these little monsters, as ugly as devils, especially the female; but they are all bedaubed with diamonds, and stand at her Majesty's elbow in all public places. The Duke of Wolfenbuttle has one, and the Duchess of Blankenburg is not without hers, but indeed the most proportionable I ever saw. I am told the King of Denmark has fo far improved upon this fashion, that his dwarf is his chief minister. I can affign no reason for their fondness for these pieces of deformity, but the opinion all the absolute Princes have, that 'tis below them to converse with the rest of mankind; and not to be quite alone, they are forced to feek their companions among the refuse of human nature, thefe these creatures being the only part of their court privileged to talk freely to them. I am at prefent confined to my chamber by a fore throat, and am really glad of the excuse to avoid feeing people, that I love well enough to be very much mortified when I think I am going to part with them for ever. 'Tis true the Austrians are not commonly the most polite people in the world, nor the most agreeable. But Vienna is inhabited by all nations, and I had formed to myself a little society of fuch as were perfectly to my own tafte. And though the number was not very great, I could never pick up, in any other place, fuch a number of reasonable, agreeable people. We were almost always together, and you know I have ever been of opinion, that a chosen conversation, composed of a few that one esteems, is the greatest happiness of life. Here are some Spaniards of both fexes that have all the vivacity and generofity of fentiments anciently afcribed to their nation; and could I believe, that the whole kingdom were like them, I would wish nothing

neir

7 2

use

igh

am

00-ee-

ns,

of.

nd

ıld

2

Ve

·I

1-

S, ne

1-

[-

ıt

h

nothing more than to end my days there. The ladies of my acquaintance have fo much goodness for me, they cry whenever they see me, fince I have determined to undertake this journey. And, indeed, I am not very eafy when I reflect on what I am going to fuffer. Almost every body I fee frights me with fome new difficulty. Prince Eugene has been fo good as to fay all things he could to perfuade me to flay till the Danube is thawed, that I may have the conveniency of going by water, affuring me, that the houses in Hungary are such, as are no defence against the weather, and that I shall be obliged to travel three or four days between Bude and Effeek, without finding any house at all, through defart plains covered with fnow; where the cold is fo violent, many have been killed by it. I own these terrors have made a very deep impression on my mind, because I believe he tells me things truly as they are, and no body can be better informed of them. Now I have named that great man, I am fure you expect, I should say something particular particular of him, having the advantage of feeing him very often; but I am as unwilling to speak of him at Vienna, as I should be to talk of Hercules in the court of Omphale, if I had feen him there. I don't know what comfort other people find in confidering the weakness of great men, (because, perhaps, it brings them nearer to their level) but 'tis always a mortification to me, to observe that there is no perfection in humanity. The young Prince of Portugal is the admiration of the whole court; he is handsome and polite with a great vivacity. All the officers tell wonders of his gallantry the last campaign. He is lodged at court with all the honours due to his rank .-Adieu, dear fister; this is the last account you will have from me of Vienna. If I furvive my journey, you shall hear from me again. I can fay, with great truth, in the words of Moneses, "I have long learnt to hold myfelf as nothing;" but when I think of the fatigue my poor infant must suffer, I have all a mother's fondness in my eyes, and all her tender passion in my heart.

e of

lling

be to e, if om-

eak-

ings

nor-

no

ince

hole

reat

his.

dat

.-

you

my

can

;"

ant

my

S.

P. S. I have written a letter to my lady —, that I believe she won't like; and upon cooler reslection, I think I had done better to have let it alone; but I was downright peevish at all her questions, and her ridiculous imagination, that I have certainly seen abundance of wonders which I keep to myself out of meer malice. She is very angry that I won't lye like other travellers. I verily believe she expects I should tell her of the Anthropophagie, men whose heads grow below their shoulders; however, pray say something to pacify her.

LET-

LETTER XXII.

To Mr. Pope.

Vienna, Jan. 16, O.S. 1717.

I HAVE not time to answer your letter, being in the hurry of preparing for my journey; but, I think, I ought to bid adieu to my friends with the same solemnity, as if I was going to mount a breach, at least, if I am to believe the information of the people here, who denounce all forts of terrors to me; and, indeed, the weather is at prefent fuch as very few ever fet out in. I am threatened, at the same time, with being frozen to death, buried in the fnow, and taken by the Tartars, who ravage that part of Hungary I am to pass. 'Tis true, we shall have a considerable escorte, so that, possibly, I may be diverted with a new scene, by finding myself in the midst of a battle. How my adventures will conclude, I leave entirely to providence; if comically, you shall hear of them .- Pray be so good as to tell Mr. - I have received his letter. Make him my adieus; if I live, I will anfwer it. The same compliment to my Lady R-.

LETTER XXIII.

To the Countess of-

7· our

my

ieu f I am

re,

e;

ch

d,

h, rs,

to

ed

he

ill

if

fo

t-

1-

-,

Peterwaradin, Jan. 30, O.S. 1717.

AT length, dear fifter, I am fafely arrived with all my family in good health at Peterwaradin; having fuffered fo little from the rigour of the feafon (against which we were all provided by furs) and found fuch tolerable accommodation every where, by the care of fending before, that I can hardly forbear laughing when I recollect all the frightful ideas that were given me of this journey. These, I fee, were wholly owing to the tenderness of my Vienna friends, and their defire of keeping me with them for this winter. Perhaps it will not be difagreeable to you to give a short journal of my journey, being through a country entirely unknown to you, and very little paffed, even by the Hungarians themselves, who generally chuse to take the conveniency of going down the Danube. We have had the bleffing Vol. I. H of

fo

be

It

it

nı

fir

Ba

II

TI

it, cor

Pal

tim

mai

to g

is 1

the

of being favoured with finer weather than is common at this time of the year; though the fnow was fo deep, we were obliged to have our own coaches fixed upon Traineaus, which move so swift and so easily, 'tis by far the most agreeable manner of travelling post. We came to Raab (the fecond day from Vienna) on the feventeenth instant, where Mr. W- sending word of our arrival to the governor, the best house in the town was provided for us, the garrison put under arms, a guard ordered at our door, and all other honours paid to us. The governor and all other officers immediately waited on Mr. W-, to know if there was any thing to be done for his fervice. The bishop of Temeswar came to visit us, with great civility, earnestly pressing us to dine with him next day, which we refusing, as being resolved to pursue our journey, he sent us several baskets of winter fruit, and a great variety of Hungarian wines, with a young hind just killed. This is a prelate of great power in this country, of the ancient family of Nadasti, so considerable, considerable, for many ages, in this kingdom. He is a very polite, agreeable, chearful old man, wearing the Hungarian habit, with a venerable white beard down to his girdle.-Raab is a strong town, well garrisoned and fortified, and was a long time the frontier town between the Turkish and German Empires. It has its name from the river Rab, on which it is fituated, just on its meeting with the Danube, in an open champain country. It was first taken by the Turks under the command of Bassa Sinan, in the reign of Sultan Amurath III. in the year fifteen hundred ninety four. The governor being supposed to have betrayed it, was afterwards beheaded by the Emperor's command. The Counts of Swartzenburg and Palsi retook it by surprize 1598, since which time it has remained in the hands of the Germans, though the Turks once more attempted to gain it by stratagem in 1642. The cathedral is large and well built, which is all I faw remarkable in the town. Leaving Comora on the other fide the river, we went the eighteenth

0

tl

21

TO

la

ti

fti

pa

ar

of

gr

an

I

ci

cit

th

lit

R

fu

top

ef

to Nosmuhl, a small village, where, however, we made shift to find tolerable accommodation. We continued two days travelling between this place and Buda, through the finest plains in the world, as even as if they were paved, and extremely fruitful; but for the most part defart and uncultivated, laid waste by the long wars between the Turk and the Emperor; and the more cruel civil war, occasioned by the barbarous perfecution of the Protestant religion, by the Emperor Leopold. That Prince has left behind him the character of an extraordinary piety, and was naturally of a mild merciful temper; but, putting his conscience into the hands of a jefuit, he was more cruel and treacherous to his poor Hungarian subjects, than ever the Turk has been to the Christians; breaking, without fcruple, his coronation oath, and his faith folemnly given in many public treaties. Indeed nothing can be more melancholy than in travelling through Hungary, to reflect on the former flourishing state of that kingdom, and to fee fuch a noble spot of earth almost uninhabited. Such are also the present circumstances of Buda, (where we arrived very early the twenty-fecond) once the roval feat of the Hungarian kings, whose palace there, was reckoned one of the most beautiful buildings of the age, now wholly defroyed, no part of the town having been repaired fince the last fiege, but the fortifications and the caftle, which is the present residence of the governor general Ragule, an officer of great merit. He came immediately to fee us, and carried us in his coach to his house, where I was received by his lady, with all possible civility, and magnificently entertained. This city is fituated upon a little hill on the fouth fide of the Danube. The castle is much higher than the town, and from it the prospect is very noble. Without the walls lie a vast number of little houses or rather huts, that they call the Rascian town, being altogether inhabited by that people. The governor affured me it would furnish twelve thousand fighting men. These towns look very odd; their houses stand in rows H 3 many many thousand of them so close together, that they appear, at a little distance, like old-fashioned thatched tents. They consist, every one of them, of one hovel above, and another under ground; these are their summer and winter apartments. Buda was first taken by Solyman the Magnificent, in 1526, and loft the following year to Ferdinand the First, King of Bohemia. Solyman regained it by the treachery of the garrison, and voluntarily gave it into the hands of King John of Hungary, after whose death, his fon being an infant, Ferdinand laid fiege to it, and the Queen mother was forced to call Solyman to her aid. He indeed raifed the fiege; but left a Turkish garrison in the town, and commanded her to remove her court from thence, which she was forced to submit to in It refifted afterwards the fieges laid to it, by the Marquis of Brandenburg, in the year 1542; Count Schwartzenburgh, 1598; General Rosworm, in 1602; and the Duke of Lorrain, commander of the Emperor's forces, in 1684, to whom it yielded in 1686, after an obstinate

b

Y

N

W

10

obstinate defence, Apti Bassa, the governor, being killed, fighting in the breach, with a Roman bravery. The loss of this town was so important, and so much refented by the Turks, that it occasioned the deposing of their Emperor Mahomet the Fourth, the year following.

We did not proceed on our journey till the twenty-third, when we passed through Adam and Todowar, both confiderable towns, when in the hands of the Turks, but now quite ruined. The remains, however, of fome Turkish towns, flew fomething of what they have been. This part of the country is very much over-grown with wood, and little frequented. 'Tis incredible what vast numbers of wild fowl we faw, which often live here to a good old age, --- and " undiffurb'd by guns, in quiet fleep."-We came the five and twentieth to Mohatch, and were shewed the field near it, where Lewis, the young King of Hungary, loft his army and his life, being drowned in a ditch

h

j

t

a

W fa

d

B

n

la

W

10 fit

D

m

th

ditch, trying to fly from Balybeus, general of Solyman the Magnificent. This battle opened the first passage for the Turks into the heart of Hungary. I don't name to you the little villages, of which I can fay nothing remarkable; but I'll assure you, I have always found a warm flove and great plenty, particularly of wildboar, venison, and all kinds of Gibier. few people that inhabit Hungary, live eafily enough; they have no money; but the woods and plains afford them provision in great abundance: they were ordered to give us all things necessary, even what horses we pleased to demand, gratis; but Mr. W-- would not oppress the poor country people, by making use of this order, and always paid them to the full worth of what we had. They were fo furprised at this unexpected generofity, which they are very little used to, that they always pressed upon us, at parting, a dozen of fat pheafants, or fomething of that fort for a prefent. Their dress is very primitive, being only a plain sheep's skin, and a cap and boots of.

of the fome stuff. You may easily imagine this lasts them many winters; and thus they have very little occasion for money. The twenty-fixth, we passed over the frozen Danube, with all our equipage, and carriages. We met, on the other fide, general Veterani, who invited us, with great civility, to pass the night at a little castle of his, a few miles off, affuring us we should have a very hard day's journey to reach Effek. This we found but too true, the woods being very dangerous, and scarce passable, from the vast quantity of wolves that hoard in them. We came however, fafe, though late, to Effek, where we stayed a day, to dispatch a courier with letters to the Bassa of Belgrade; and I took that opportunity of feeing the town, which is not very large, but fair built and well fortified. This was a town of great trade, very rich and populous, when in the hands of the Turks. fituated on the Drave, which runs into the Danube. The bridge was esteemed one of the most extraordinary in the world, being eight thousand paces long, and all built of oak. It was burnt, and the city laid in ashes by Count Lefly, 1685, but was again repaired and fortified by the Turks, who however abandoned it in 1687. General Dunnewalt then took poffession of it for the Emperor, in whose hands it has remained ever fince, and is esteemed one of the bulwarks of Hungary. The twenty-eighth we went to Bocorwar, a very large Rascian town, all built after the manner I have described to you. We were met there by Colonel ---, who would not fuffer us to go any where but. to his quarters, where I found his wife, a very agreeable Hungarian lady, and his niece and daughter, two pretty young women, crowded into three or four Rascian houses, cast into one, and made as neat and convenient as those places are capable of being made. The Hungarian ladies are much handsomer than those of Auf-All the Vienna beauties are of that country. They are generally very fair and well shaped, and their dress, I think, is extremely becoming. This lady was in a gown of scarlet velvet, lined and faced with sables, made exact to her shape, and the skirt falling

tl

po

10

CO

th

pu

her

hor

wh

Voy

to her feet. The fleeves are strait to their arms, and the stays buttoned before, with two rows of little buttons of gold, pearl, or diamonds. On their heads they wear a taffel of gold, that hangs low on one fide, lined with fable, or fome other fine fur .-- They gave us a handsome dinner, and I thought the conversation very polite and agreeable. They would accompany us part of our way. - The twenty-ninth, we arrived here, where we were met by the commanding officer at the head of all the officers of the garrison. We are lodged in the best apartment of the governor's house, and entertained in a very splendid manner, by the Emperor's order. We wait here till all points are adjusted, concerning our reception on the Turkish frontiers. Mr. W---'s courier, which he fent from Essek, returned this morning, with the Bassa's answer in a purse of scarlet fattin, which the Interpreter here has translated. 'Tis to promise him to be honourably received. I defired him to appoint where he would be met, by the Turkish convoy .-- He has dispatched the courier back, naming naming Betsko, a village in the midway between Peterwaradin and Belgrade. We shall flay here till we receive his answer. - Thus, dear fifter, I have given you a very particular, and (I am afraid you'll think) a tedious account of this part of my travels. It was not an affectation of shewing my reading that has made me tell you some little scraps of the history of the towns I have passed through. I have always avoided any thing of that kind, when I fpoke of places that I believe you knew the flory of, as well as myself. But Hungary being a part of the world, which I believe quite new to you, I thought you might read with fome pleafure an account of it, which I have been very folicitous to get from the best hands. However, if you don't like it, 'tis in your power to forbear reading it. I am,

Dear Sifter,

I am promised to have this letter carefully fent to Vienna.

LETTER XXIV.

To Mr. Pope.

Belgrade. Feb. 12, O. S. 1717.

I DID verily intend to write to you a long letter from Peterwaradin, where I expected to stay three or four days, but the Bassa here was in such haste to see us, that he dispatched the courier back (which Mr. Whad fent to know the time he would fend the convoy to meet us) without fuffering him to pull off his boots. My letters were not thought important enough to stop our journey, and we left Peterwaradin the next day, being waited on by the chief officers of the garrison, and a confiderable convoy of Germans and Rafcians. The Emperor has feveral regiments of these people; but, to say the truth, they are rather plunderers than foldiers; having no pay, and being obliged to furnish their own arms and horses; they rather look like vagabond gypties, or flout beggars, than regular troops.

I cannot forbear speaking a word of this race of creatures, who are very numerous all over Hungary. They have a patriarch of their own at Grand Cairo, and are really of the Greek church, but their extreme ignorance gives their priefts occasion to impose several new notions upon them. These fellows letting their hair and beard grow inviolate, make exactly the figure of the Indian Bramins. They are heirs general to all the money of the laiety; for which, in return, they give them formal paffports figned and fealed for Heaven; and the wives and children only inherit the house and cattle. In most other points they follow the Greek church.—This little digression has interrupted my telling you we paffed over the fields of Carlowitz, where the last great victory was obtained by Prince Eugene over the Turks. The marks of that glorious bloody day are yet recent, the field being yet strewed with the skulls and carcasses of unburied men, horses, and camels. I could not look without horror on fuch numbers of mangled human bodies, nor

it

be

th

de

fta

CO

WO

pot

arg

how

in a

· V

mid

by :

nor without reflecting on the injustice of war, that makes murther not only necessary but meritorious. Nothing feems to be plainer proof of the irrationality of mankind (whatever fine claims we pretend to reason) than the rage with which they contest for a small spot of ground, when fuch vast parts of fruitful earth lie quite uninhabited. 'Tis true, custom has now made it unavoidable; but can there be a greater demonstration of want of reason, than a custom being firmly established, so plainly contrary to the interest of man in general? I am a good deal inclined to believe Mr. Hobbs, that the flate of nature, is a flate of war; but thence I conclude human nature not rational, if the word reason means common sense, as I suppose it does. I have a great many admirable arguments to support this reflection; I won't however trouble you with them, but return, in a plain style, to the history of my travels.

We were met at Betsko (a village in the midway between Belgrade and Peterwaradin) by an Aga of the Janizaries, with a body of Turks

ut

10 nc

y

vil

en

b f ete

ant

hey

go,

elf

urse

erm

nan

o he eopl

he go

ruth ell u ther

Vor.

Turks, exceeding the Germans by one hundred men, though the Baffa had engaged to fend exactly the same number. You may judge by this of their fears. I am really perfuaded, that they hardly thought the odds of one hundred men fet them even with the Germans; however, I was very uneafy till they were parted, fearing some quarrel might arise notwithstanding the parole given. We came late to Belgrade, the deep fnows making the afcent to it very difficult. It feems a strong city, fortified, on the east fide, by the Danube; and on the fouth, by the river Save, and was formerly the barrier of Hungary. It was first taken by Solyman the Magnificent; and fince by the Emperor's forces, led by the Elector of Bavaria. The Emperor held it only two years, it being retaken by the Grand Vizier. It is now fortified with the utmost care and skill the Turks are capable of, and ftrengthened by a very numerous garrison of their bravest Janizaries, commanded by a Bassa Seraskier (i.e. General;) though this last expression is not very just;

ed

X-

by

at

ed

V-

d,

1-

1-

it

1, le i

le

).

.

1.

g

S

,

or to fay truth, the Seraskier is commanded by he Janizaries. These troops have an absolute uthority here, and their conduct carries much ore the aspect of rebellion, than the appearnce of subordination. You may judge of this y the following story, which at the same time ill give you an idea of the admirable intellience of the Governor of Peterwaradin, though few hours diffant. We were told by him at eterwaradin, that the garrison and inhabiants of Belgrade were so weary of the war, hey had killed their Bassa about two months go, in a mutiny, because he had suffered himelf to be prevailed upon by a bribe of five urles (five hundred pound sterling) to give ermission to the Tartars to ravage the Gernan frontiers. We were very well pleased hear of fuch favourable dispositions in the eople, but when we came hither, we found be governor had been ill informed, and the real buth of the story to be this. The late Bassa ell under the displeasure of his soldiers, for no ther reason, but restraining their incursions Vor. I. on on the Germans. They took it into their heads from that mildness, that he had intelligence with the enemy, and fent fuch information to the Grand Signior at Adrianople; but redrefs not coming quick enough from thence, they affembled themselves in a tumultous manner, and by force dragged their Bassa before the Cadi and Mufti, and there demanded justice in a mutinous way; one crying out, Why he protected the Infidels? Another, Why he squeezed them of their money? The Bassa, easily guessing their purpose, calmly replied to them, that they asked him too many questions, and that he had but one life, which must answer for all. They then immediately fell upon him with their fcymitars, (without waiting the fentence of their heads of the law and in a few moments cut him in pieces. The present Bassa has not dared to punish the murder; on the contrary, he affected to applaud the actors of it, as brave fellows, that knew how to do themselves justice. He takes a pretences of throwing money among the gar rifon

h

b

2

t

h

u

01

th

gr

k

an

Ef

the

go

reif

lli-

nabut

ce,

ous

be-

ded

ut,

er,

he

nly

any ich

ely

ou

W

The

ur

aud

nev

2

gar

fon

rison, and suffers them to make little excursions into Hungary, where they burn some poor Rascian houses.

You may imagine, I cannot be very eafy in a town which is really under the government of an infolent foldiery .-- We expected to be immediately dismissed, after a night's lodging here; but the Bassa detains us till he receives orders from Adrianople, which may, possibly be a month a coming. In the mean time, we are lodged in one of the best houses, belonging to a very confiderable man amongst them, and have a whole chamber of Janizaries to guard us. My only diversion is the conversation of our host Achmet-beg, a title fomething like that of Count in Germany. His father was a great Bassa, and he has been educated in the most polite Eastern learning, being perfectly skilled in the Arabic and Persian languages, and an extraordinary scribe, which they call Effendi. This accomplishment makes way to the greatest preferments; but he has had the good sense to prefer an easy, quiet, secure life, to all the dangerous honours of the Porte. He fups with us every night, and drinks wine very freely. You cannot imagine how much he is delighted with the liberty of conversing with me. He has explained to me feveral pieces of Arabian poetry, which, I obferve, are in numbers, not unlike ours, generally of an alternate verse, and of a very musical found. Their expressions of love are very paffionate and lively. I am fo much pleased with them, I really believe I should learn to read Arabic, if I was to flay here a few months. He has very good library of their books of all kinds; and, as he tells me, spends the greatest part of his life there. I pass for a great scholar with him, by relating to him fome of the Persian tales, which I find are genuine. At first, he believed I understood Perfian. I have frequent disputes with him, concerning the difference of our customs, particularly the confinement of women. He affures me, there is nothing at all in it; only, fays he, we have the advantage, that when our wives

I 2

e

le

h

-

y

d

0

W

S

2

n

.

.

-

Ir

S

wives cheat us, no body knows it. He has wit, and is more polite than many Christian men of quality. I am very much entertained with him .- He has had the curiofity to make one of our fervants fet him an alphabet of our letters, and can already write a good Roman But these amusements do not hinder my wishing heartily to be out of this place; though the weather is colder than I believe it ever was, any where, but in Greenland --We have a very large stove constantly kept hot, and yet the windows of the room are frozen on the infide. God knows when I may have an opportunity of fending this letter; but I have written it, for the discharge of my own conscience; and you cannot now reproach me, that one of yours makes ten of mine. Adjeu.

LET.

LETTER XXV.

To her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales.*

Adrianople, April 1, O. S. 1717.

I HAVE now, Madam, finished a journey that has not been undertaken by any Christian, fince the time of the Greek Emperors; and I shall not regret all the fatigues I have suffered in it, if it gives me an opportunity of amusing your R. H. by an account of places utterly unknown amongst us; the Emperor's Ambassadors, and those few English that have come hither, always going on the Danube to Nicopolis. But the river was now frozen, and Mr. W- was fo zealous for the service of his Majesty, that he would not defer his journey to wait for the conveniency of that passage. We crossed the deserts of Servia, almost quite over-grown with wood, though a country naturally fertile. The inhabitants are industrious; but the oppression of the peafants is so great, they are forced to abandon their

[.] The late Queen Caroline,

7. la

ny

n-

les

1-nt

he

7-

n

10

ot

of

their houses, and neglect their tillage, all they have being a prey to the Janizaries, whenever they please to seize upon it. We had a guard of five hundred of them, and I was almost in tears every day, to fee their infolencies in the poor villages through which we passed .- After feven days travelling through thick woods, we came to Nissa, once the capital of Servia, fituated in a fine plain on the river Nissava, in a very good air, and so fruitful a soil, that the great plenty is hardly credible. I was certainly affured, that the quantity of wine last vintage was fo prodigious, that they were forced to dig holes in the earth to put it in, not having vessels enough in the town to hold it. The happiness of this plenty is scarce perceived by the oppressed people. I saw here a new occasion for my compassion. The wretches that had provided twenty waggons for our baggage from Belgrade hither for a certain hire, being all fent back without payment, some of their horses lamed, and others killed, without any fatiffaction made for them. The poor fellows came round the house weeping and tearing their hair and

and beards in a most pitiful manner, without getting any thing but drubs from the infolent foldiers. I cannot express to your R. H. how much I was moved at this scene. I would have paid them the money, out of my own pocket, with all my heart; but it would have been only giving fo much to the Aga, who would have taken it from them without any remorfe. After four days journey from this place over the mountains, we came to Sophia, fituated in a large beautiful plain on the river Isca, and furrounded with distant mountains, 'Tis hardly possible to see a more agreeable landskip. The city itself is very large and extremely populous. Here are hot baths, very famous for their medicinal virtues .- Four days journey from hence we arrived at Philippopolis, after having passed the ridges between the mountains of Haemus and Rhodope, which are always covered with fnow. This town is fituated on a rifing ground, near the river Hebrus, and is almost wholly inhabited by Greeks; here are still some ancient Christian churches. They

They have a bishop; and several of the richest Greeks live here; but they are forced to conceal their wealth with great care, the appearance of poverty (which includes part of its inconveniences) being all their fecurity against feeling it in earnest. The country from hence to Adrianople, is the finest in the world. Vines grow wild on all the hills, and the perpetual fpring they enjoy, makes every thing gay and flourishing. But this climate, happy as it feems, can never be preferred to England, with all its frosts and fnows, while we are bleffed with an eafy government, under a king, who makes his own happiness confist in the liberty of his people, and chooses rather to be looked upon as their father than their master .- This theme would carry me very far, and I am fensible I have already tired out your R. H's patience. But my letter is in your hands, and you may make it as fhort as you please, by throwing it into the fire, when weary of reading it. I am, Madam,

With the greatest respect.

LETTER XXVI.

To the Lady ----.

Adrianople. April 1, O. S. 1717.

I AM now got into a new world, where every thing I fee appears to me a change of scene; and I write to your ladyship, with fome content of mind, hoping, at least, that you will find the charm of novelty in my letters, and no longer reproach me, that I tell you nothing extraordinary. I won't trouble you with a relation of our tedious journey; but I must not omit what I saw remarkable at Sophia, one of the most beautiful towns in the Turkish empire, and famous for its hot baths, that are reforted to both for diversion and health. I stopt here one day, on purpose to see them; and defigning to go incognito, I hired a Turkish coach. These voitures are not at all like ours, but much more convenient for the country, the heat being fo great that glaffes would be very troublesome. They are made a good deal in the manner of the Dutch stage coaches, having wooden lattices painted and gilded; the inside being also painted with baskets and nosegays of slowers, intermixed commonly with little poetical mottos. They are covered all over with scarlet cloth, lined with silk, and very often richly embroidered and fringed.— This covering entirely hides the persons in them, but may be thrown back at pleasure, and thus permit the ladies to peep through the lattices. They hold sour people very conveniently, seated on cushions, but not raised.

In one of these covered waggons, I went to the Bagnio about ten o'clock. It was already sull of women. It is built of stone, in the shape of a dome, with no windows but in the roof, which gives light enough. There were sive of these domes joining together, the outmost being less than the rest, and serving only as a hall, where the portress stood at the door. Ladies of quality generally give this woman a crown or ten shillings, and I did not forget that seremony. The next room is a very large one, paved paved with marble, and all round it are two raised Sosas of marble, one above another. There were four fountains of cold water in this room, falling first into marble basons, and then running on the floor in little channels made for that purpose, which carried the streams into the next room, something less than this, with the same fort of marble sosas, but so hot with steams of sulphur, proceeding from the baths joining to it, 'twas impossible to stay there with one's clothes on. The two other domes were the hot baths, one of which had cocks of cold water turning into it, to temper it to what degree of warmth the bathers pleased to have.

I was in my travelling habit, which is a riding dress, and certainly appeared very extraordinary to them. Yet there was not one of them that shewed the least surprize or impertinent curiosity, but received me with all the obliging civility possible. I know no European court, where the ladies would have behaved themselves in so polite a manner to such a stranger. I believe, upon the whole, there were two hundred women, women, and yet none of those disdainful smiles, and fatirical whifpers, that never fail in our affemblies, when any body appears that is not dreffed exactly in the fashion. They repeated over and over to me: "UZELLE, PEK U-ZELLE," which is nothing but "charming, very charming."-- The first fofas were covered with cushions and rich carpets, on which fat the ladies; and on the fecond, their flaves behind them, but without any distinction of rank by their dress, all being in the state of nature, that is, in plain English, stark naked, without any beauty or defect concealed. Yet there was not the least wanton fmile or immodest gesture among them. They walked and moved with the same majestic grace, which Milton describes our General Mother with. There were many amongst them, as exactly proportioned as ever any goddess was drawn by the pencil of a Guido or Titian,—and most of their skins shiningly white, only adorned by their beautiful hair, divided into many treffes, hanging on their shoulders, braided either with pearl pearl or ribbon, perfectly representing the figures of the graces.

I was here convinced of the truth of a reflection I have often made, that if it were the fashion to go naked, the face would be hardly observed. I perceived that the ladies of the most delicate skins and finest shapes, had the greatest share of my admiration, though their faces were fometimes less beautiful than those of their companions. To tell you the truth, I had wickedness enough to wish secretly, that Mr. Gervais could have been there invisible. I fancy it would have very much improved his. art, to see so many fine women naked in different postures, some in conversation, some working, others drinking coffee or sherbert, and many negligently lying on their cushions, while their flaves (generally pretty girls of seventeen or eighteen) were employed in braiding their hair in feveral pretty fancies. In short, 'tis the woman's coffee-house, where all the news of the town is told, fcandal invented, &c .-They

They generally take this diversion once a week, and stay there at least four or five hours, without getting cold by immediate coming out of the hot-bath into the cold room, which was very furprifing to me. The lady that feemed the most considerable among them, entreated me to fit by her, and would fain have undreffed me for the bath. I excused myself with some difficulty. They being, however, all so earnest in perfuading me, I was at last forced to open my shirt, and shew them my stays, which satisfied them very well; for, I faw, they believed I was locked up in that machine, and that it was not in my own power to open it, which contrivance they attributed to my hufband .- I was charmed with their civility and beauty, and should have been very glad to pass more time with them; but Mr. W-- refolving to pursue his journey next morning early, I was in haste to see the ruins of Justinian's church, which did not afford me so agreeable a prospect as I had left, being little more than a heap of stones.

Adieu, Madam, I am fure I have now entertained you with an account of fuch a fight, as you never faw in your life, and what no book of travels could inform you of, as 'tis no less than death for a man to be found in one of these places.

L E T T E R XXVII.

To the Abbot ----.

Adrianople, April 1, O.S. 1717.

YOU fee that I am very exact in keeping the promise you engaged me to make. I know not, however, whether your curiofity will be fatisfied with the accounts I shall give you, tho' I can assure you, the defire I have to oblige you to the utmost of my power, has made me very diligent in my enquiries and obfervations. 'Tis certain we have but very imperfect accounts of the manners and religion of these people. This part of the world being feldom vifited, but by merchants, who mind little but their own affairs; or travellers, who make too short a stay to be able to report any thing exactly of their own knowledge. The Turks are too proud to converse familiarly with merchants, who can give no better account of the ways here, than a French Refugee, lodging Vol. I. K in in a garret in Greek-street, could write of the court of England. The journey we have made from Belgrade hither, cannot possibly be passed by any out of a public character. The defert woods of Servia, are the common refuge of thieves, who rob, fifty in a company, so that we had need of all our guards to fecure us; and the villages are so poor, that only force could extort from them necessary provisions. Indeed the Janizaries had no mercy on their poverty, killing all the poultry and sheep they could find, without asking to whom they belonged; while the wretched owners durft not put in their claim for fear of being beaten. Lambs just fallen, geese and turkies big with egg, all maffacred without distinction! I fancied I heard the complaints of Melibeus, for the hope of his flock. When the Bassas travel, 'tis yet worfe. Those oppressors are not content with eating all that is to be eaten belonging to the peasants; after they have crammed themselves and their numerous retinue, they have the impudence to exact what they call

C

le

ed

rt

of

at ce

S.

ir

ey

e-

ot

n.

th

n-

or

2-ot

e-

nic,

ey

all

call Teeth-money, a contribution for their use of their teeth, worn with doing them the honour of devouring their meat. This is literally and exactly true, however extravagant it may seem; and such is the natural corruption of a military government, their religion not allowing of this barbarity, any more than ours does.

I had the advantage of lodging three weeks at Belgrade, with a principal Effendi, that is to fay, a scholar. This set of men are equally capable of preferments in the law or the church; those two sciences being cast into one, and a lawyer and a priest being the same word in the Turkish language. They are the only men really confiderable in the Empire, all the prohtable employments and church revenues are in their hands. The Grand Signior, though general heir to his people, never presumes to touch their lands or money, which go, in an uninterrupted fuccession, to their children. Tis true, they lose this privilege, by accepting a place at court, or the title of Bassa; but there K 2

n

0

at

to

ca

th

lav

Tu

rea

fita

in t

gen

tou

unii

'Tis

ing

in a garret in Greek-street, could write of the court of England. The journey we have made from Belgrade hither, cannot possibly be passed by any out of a public character. The defert woods of Servia, are the common refuge of thieves, who rob, fifty in a company, fo that we had need of all our guards to fecure us; and the villages are fo poor, that only force could extort from them necessary provisions. Indeed the Janizaries had no mercy on their poverty, killing all the poultry and sheep they could find, without asking to whom they belonged; while the wretched owners durft not put in their claim for fear of being beaten. Lambs just fallen, geefe and turkies big with egg, all maffacred without distinction! I fancied I heard the complaints of Melibeus, for the hope of his flock. When the Baffas travel, 'tis yet worse. Those oppressors are not content with eating all that is to be eaten belonging to the peafants; after they have crammed themselves and their numerous retinue, they have the impudence to exact what they call call Teeth-money, a contribution for their use of their teeth, worn with doing them the honour of devouring their meat. This is literally and exactly true, however extravagant it may seem; and such is the natural corruption of a military government, their religion not allowing of this barbarity, any more than ours does.

I had the advantage of lodging three weeks at Belgrade, with a principal Effendi, that is to fay, a scholar. This set of men are equally capable of preferments in the law or the church; those two sciences being cast into one, and a lawyer and a prieft being the fame word in the Turkish language. They are the only men really confiderable in the Empire, all the profitable employments and church revenues are in their hands. The Grand Signior, though general heir to his people, never prefumes to touch their lands or money, which go, in an uninterrupted fuccession, to their children. Tis true, they lose this privilege, by accepting a place at court, or the title of Bassa; but K 2 there there are few examples of fuch fools among them. You may eafily judge of the power of these men, who have engrossed all the learning and almost all the wealth of the Empire. 'Tis they that are the real authors, tho' the soldiers are the actors of revolutions. They deposed the late Sultan Mustapha, and their power is well known, that 'tis the Emperor's interest to flatter them.

N

h

fir

bi

to

as

mu

tion

nat

teri

Jab

Lut

zeal

prev

cret

indee

with the c

Ther

beg d

This is a long digression. I was going to tell you, that an intimate, daily conversation with the Essendi Achmet-beg, gave me an opportunity of knowing their religion and morals in a more particular manner than perhaps any Christian ever did. I explained to him the difference between the religion of England and Rome; and he was pleased to hear there were Christians, that did not worship images, or adore the Virgin Mary. The ridicule of translubstantiation appeared very strong to him. Upon comparing our creeds together, I am convinced, that if our friend Dr. — had free liberty of preaching here, it would be very easy casy to persuade the generality to Christianity, whose notions are very little different from his. Mr. Whiston would make a very good apostle here. I don't doubt but his zeal will be much fired, if you communicate this account to him; but tell him, he must first have the gift of tongues, before he can possibly be of any use. -Mahometism is divided into as many sects as Christianity, and the first institution as much neglected and obscured by interpretations. I cannot here forbear reflecting on the natural inlination of mankind, to make mysteries and novelties .- The Zeidi, Kudi, Jabari, &c. put me in mind of the Catholics. Lutherans, and Calvinists, and are equally zealous against one another. But the most prevailing opinion, if you fearch into the fecret of the Effendi's, is plain Deism. This is indeed kept from the people, who are amused with a thousand different notions, according to the different interests of their preachers .---There are very few amongst them (Achmetbeg denied there were any) fo abfurd, as to fet up for wit, by declaring they believe no God at all. And Sir Paul Rycaut is mistaken (as he commonly is) in calling the feet Muterin (i. e. the fecret with us) Atheists, they being Deifts, whose impiety consists in making a jest of their prophet. Achmet-beg did not own to. me, that he was of this opinion, but made no scruple of deviating from some part of Mahomet's law, by drinking wine with the fame freedom we did. When I asked him how he came to allow himself that liberty; he made answer, that all the creatures of God are good, and defigned for the use of man; however, that the prohibition of wine was a very wife maxim, and meant for the common people, being the fource of all diforders amongst them: but that the prophet never defigned to confine those that knew how to use it with moderation; nevertheless, he said that scandal ought to be avoided, and that he never drank it in public. This is the general way of thinking amongst them, and very few forbear drinking wine, that are able to afford it. He affured me, that

K 3

n

m

fe

CC

of

ro

bei

the

fen

titl

is w lipp

felv

who

if I understood Arabic, I should be very well pleafed with reading the Alcoran, which is fo far from the nonfense we charge it with, that 'tis the purest morality, delivered in the very best language. I have fince heard impartial Christians speak of it in the same manner; and I don't doubt but that all our translations are from copies got from the Greek priefts, who would not fail to falfify it with the extremity of malice. No body of men ever were more ignorant, or more corrupt; yet they differ so little from the Romish church, that, I confess, nothing gives me a greater abhorrence of the cruelty of your clergy, than the barbarous perfecution of them, whenever they have been their masters, for no other reason, than their not acknowledging the Pope. The diffenting in that one article, has got them the titles of Heretics, and Schismatics; and what is worse, the same treatment. I found at Philippopolis, a fect of Christians that call themselves Paulines. They shew an old church, where, they say, St. Paul preached, and he is their their favourite Saint, after the same manner that St. Peter is at Rome; neither do they forget to give him the preference over the rest of the Apostles.

But of all the religions I have feen, that of the Arnounts feems to me the most particular: they are natives of Arnountlich, the ancient Macedonia, and still retain the courage and hardiness, though they have lost the name of Macedonians, being the best militia in the Turkish Empire, and the only check upon the Janizaries. They are foot foldiers; we had a guard of them, relieved in every confiderable town we paffed; they are all clothed and armed at their own expence, dreffed in clean white coarfe cloth, carrying guns of a prodigious length, which they run with on their shoulders, as if they did not feel the weight of them, the leader finging a fort of a rude tune, not unpleafant, and the rest making up the chorus. These people living between Christians and Mahometans, and not being skilled in controverfy, declare, that they are utterly unable to judge judge which religion is best; but to be certain of not entirely rejecting the truth, they very prudently follow both. They go to the mosques on Fridays, and to the church on Sunday,—faying for their excuse, that at the day of judgment they are sure of protection from the true prophet; but which that is, they are not able to determine in this world. I believe there is no other race of mankind, who have so modest an opinion of their own capacity.

These are the remarks I have made, on the diversity of religions I have seen. I don't ask your pardon for the liberty I have taken in speaking of the Roman. I know you equally condemn the quackery of all churches, as much as you revere the sacred truths, in which we both agree.

You will expect I should say something to you of the antiquities of this country, but there are sew remains of ancient Greece. We passed near the piece of an arch which is commonly called called Trajan's gate, from a supposition that he made it to flut up the passage over the mountains, between Sophia and Philippopolis. But I rather believe it the remains of some triumphal arch (though I could not fee any inscription); for if that passage had been shut up, there are many others that would ferve for the march of an army; and notwithstanding the ftory of Baldwin Earl of Flanders being overthrown in these straits, after he won Constantinople, I don't fancy the Germans would find themselves stopped by them at this day. 'Tis true, the road is now made (with great industry) as commodious as possible, for the march of the Turkish army; there is not one ditch or puddle between this place and Belgrade, that has not a large strong bridge of planks built over it; but the precipices are not so terrible as I had heard them represented. At these mountains we lay at the little village Kifkoi, wholly inhabited by Christians, as all the peafants of Bulgaria are. Their houses are nothing but little huts, raised of dirt baked in the fun, fun, and they leave them and fly into the mountains, fome months before the march of the Turkish army, who would else entirely ruin them, by driving away their whole flocks .-This precaution fecures them in a fort of plenty; for fuch vast tracts of land lying in common, they have the liberty of fowing what they please, and are generally very industrious hufbandmen. I drank here feveral forts of delicious wine. The women drefs themselves in a great variety of coloured glass beads, and are not ugly, but of tawney complexion. I have now told you all that is worth telling you, and perhaps more, relating to my journey. When I am at Constantinople, I'll try to pick up fome curiofities, and then you shall hear again from

Yours, &c.

LETTER XXVIII.

To the Countess of B---.

Adrianople, April 1, O.S. 1717

She

AS I never can forget the smallest of your ladyship's commands, my first business here has been to enquire after the stuffs you ordered me to look for, without being able to find what you would like. The difference of the dress here and at London is so great, the same fort of things are not proper for Caftans and Manteaus. However, I will not give over my fearch, but renew it again at Constantinople, tho' I have reason to believe there is nothing finer than what is to be found here, as this place is at prefent the residence of the court. The Grand Signior's eldest daughter was married fome few days before I came hither, and upon that occasion the Turkish ladies display all their magnificence. The bride was conducted to her husband's house in very great splendour .-

She is widow of the late Vizier, who was killed at Peterwaradin, though that ought rather to be called a contract than a marriage, fince she never has lived with him; however, the greatest part of his wealth is hers. He had the permission of visiting her in the Seraglio; and being one of the handsomest men in the empire, had very much engaged her affections.—When she saw this second husband, who is at least fifty, she could not forbear bursting into tears. He is indeed a man of merit, and the declared favourite of the Sultan, (which they call Mosayp) but that is not enough to make him pleasing in the eyes of a girl of thirteen.

The government here is entirely in the hands of the army. The Grand Signior, with all his absolute power, is as much a slave as any of his subjects, and trembles at a Janizary's frown.—Here is, indeed, a much greater appearance of subjection than amongst us; a minister of state is not spoke to, but upon the knee; should a reslection on his conduct be dropt in a coffee-house, (for they have spies every every where) the house would be raz'd to the ground, and perhaps the whole company put to the torture. No huzzaing mobs, senseless pamphlets, and tavern disputes about politics:

A consequential ill that freedom draws; A bad effect—but from a noble cause.

None of our harmless calling names!—But when a minister here displeases the people, in three hours time he is dragged even from his master's arms. They cut off his hands, head, and feet, and throw them before the palacegate, with all the respect in the world; while the Sultan (to whom they all profess an unlimited adoration) sits trembling in his apartment, and dare neither defend nor revenge his favourite. This is the blessed condition of the most absolute monarch upon earth, who owns no Law but his Will.

I cannot help wishing, in the loyalty of my heart, that the parliament would send hither a ship load of your passive obedient men, that they might see arbitrary government in its clearest strongest light, where 'tis hard to judge whether whether the Prince, People, or Ministers, are most miserable. I could make many reslections on this subject; but I know, Madam, your own good sense has already furnished you with better than I am capable of.

I went yesterday along with the French Ambaffadress to see the Grand Signior in his pasfage to the Mosque. He was preceded by a numerous guard of Janizaries, with vast white feathers on their heads, as also by the Spahis and Bostangees, (these are foot and horseguards) and the Royal Gardeners, which are a very confiderable body of men, dreffed in different habits of fine lively colours, fo that at a distance, they appeared like a parterre of tulips. After them the Aga of the Janizaries. in a robe of purple velvet, lined with filver tiffue, his horse led by two slaves richly dressed. Next him the Kyzlier Aga, (your lady knows, this is the chief guardian of the Seraglio Ladies) in a deep yellow cloth (which fuited very well to his black face) lined with fables. Last came his Sublimity himfelf, arrayed in green, lined lined with the fur of a black Muscovite fox, which is supposed to be worth a thousand pounds sterling, and mounted on a fine horse, with furniture embroidered with jewels. Six more horses, richly comparisoned, were led by him; and two of his principal courtiers bore, one his gold, and the other his filver coffeepot, on a staff; another carried a filver stool on his head for him to fit on .- It would be too tedious to tell your ladyship the various dresses and turbants by which their rank is diffinguished; but they were all extremely rich and gay, to the number of some thousands; so that perhaps there cannot be feen a more beautiful procession. The Sultan appeared to us a handsome man of about forty, with something, however, fevere in his countenance, and his eyes very full and black. He happened to ftop under the window where we flood, and (I suppose being told who we were) looked upon us very attentively, fo that we had full leifure to confider him. The French Ambassadress agreed with me as to his good mien. I fee that lady lady very often; she is young, and her converfation would be a great relief to me, if I could persuade her to live without those forms and ceremonies that make life formal and tiresome. But she is so delighted with her guards, her four-and-twenty footmen, gentlemen-ushers, &c. that she would rather die than make me a visit without them; not to reckon a coachful. of attending damfels yclep'd maids of honour. What vexes me is, that as long as fhe will vifit : me with a troublesome equipage, I am obliged to do the same; however, our mutual interest. makes us much together. I went with her the other day all round the town, in an open gilt chariot, with our joint train of attendants, preceded by our guards, who might have fummoned the people to fee what they had never feen, nor ever perhaps would fee again, two young Christian Ambassadresses at the same Your ladyship may easily imagine, we drew a vast croud of spectators, but all filent as death. If any of them had taken the liberties. of our mobs upon any strange fight, our Jani-VOL. I. L zaries zaries had made no scruple of falling on them with their fcymitars, without danger for fo doing, being above law. These people however (I mean the Janizaries) have fome good qualities; they are very zealous and faithful where they ferve, and look upon it as their bufiness to fight for you on all occasions. Of this I had a very pleasant instance in a village on this side Philippopolis, where we were met by our domestic guards. I happened to bespeak pigeons for supper, upon which one of my Janizaries went immediately to the Cadi (the chief civil officer of the town) and ordered him to fend in fome dozens. The poor man answered, that he had already fent about, but could get none. My Janizary, in the height of his zeal for my fervice, immediately locked him up prisoner in his room, telling him he deferved death for his impudence, in offering to excuse his not obeying my command; but, out of respect to me, he would not punish him but by my order. Accordingly he came very gravely to me, to ask what should be done to him; adding, by way

0

ir

e

way of compliment, that if I pleased he would bring me his head .- This may give you fome idea of the unlimited power of these fellows, who are all fworn brothers, and bound to revenge the injuries done to one another. whether at Cairo, Aleppo, or any part of the world. This inviolable league makes them fo powerful, that the greatest man at court never speaks to them but in a flattering tone; and in Asia, any man that is rich, is forced to enroll. himself a Janizary to secure his estate. - But I have already faid enough, and I dare fwear, dear Madam, that, by this time, 'tis a very comfortable reflection to you, that there is no possibility of your receiving such a tedious letter but once in fix months; 'tis that confideraation has given me the affurance of entertaining you fo long, and will, I hope, plead the excuse of, dear Madam, Your's, &c.

LETTER XXIX.

To the Countess of-

Adrianople, April 1, O.S. 1717.

I WISH to God, dear fifter, that you were as regular in letting me know what passes on your side of the globe, as I am careful in endeavouring to amuse you by the account of all I see here, that I think worth your notice. You content yourfelf with telling me over and over that the town is very dull: it may possibly be dull to you, when every day does not present you with something new; but for me, that am in arrears, at least two months news, all that feems very stale with you, would be very fresh and sweet here. Pray let me into more particulars, and I will try to awaken your gratitude by giving you a full and true relation of the novelties of this place, none of which would furprize you more than a fight of my person, as I am now in my Turkish habit, though I believe you would be of my opinion, nion, that 'tis admirably becoming.—I intend to fend you my picture; in the mean time accept of it here.

The first part of my dress is a pair of drawers, very full, that reach to my shoes, and conceal the legs more modefly than your petticoats. They are of a thin rose-coloured damask, brocaded with filver flowers. My shoes are of a white kid leather, embroidered with gold. Over this hangs my smock, of a fine white filk gauze, edged with embroidery. This smock has wide sleeves hanging half-way down the arm, and is closed at the neck with a diamond button, but the shape and colour of the bosom is very well to be distinguished through it .- The Antery is a waiftcoat, made close to the shape, of white and gold damask, with very long fleeves falling back, and fringed with deep gold fringe, and should have diamond or pearl buttons. My Caftan, of the same stuff with my drawers, is a robe exactly fitted to my shape and reaching to my feet, with very long strait falling sleeves. Over this is the girdle, L 3 girdle, of about four fingers broad, which all that can afford it, have entirely of diamonds or other precious stones; those, who will not be at that expence, have it of exquisite embroidery on fattin; but it must be fastened before with a clasp of diamonds.—The Curdée is a loose robe they throw off, or put on, according to the weather, being of a rich brocade (mine is green and gold) either lined with ermine or fables; the fleeves reach very little below the shoulders. The head-dress is composed of a cap called Talpock, which is, in winter, of fine velvet embroidered with pearls or diamonds, and, in summer, of a light shining silver stuff. This is fixed on one side of the head, hanging a little way down with a gold taffel, and bound on, either with a circle of diamonds (as I have seen several) or a rich embroidered handkerchief. On the other fide of the head the hair is laid flat; and here the ladies are at liberty to shew their fancies; some putting flowers, others a plume of heron's feathers, and, in short, what they please; but the most general general fathion is, a large Bouquet of jewels, made like natural flowers, that is, the buds of pearl; the roses of different coloured rubies; the jessamines of diamonds; the jonquils of topazes, &c. fo well fet and enamelled, 'tis hard to imagine any thing of that kind so beautiful. The hair hangs at its full length behind, divided into treffes braided with pearl or ribbon, which is always in great quantity. I never faw in my life, fo many fine heads of hair. In one lady's I have counted a hundred and ten of the treffes, all natural; but it must be owned that every kind of beauty is more common here than with us. 'Tis furprizing to see a young woman that is not very handfome. They have naturally the most beautiful complexion in the world, and generally large black eyes. I can affure you with great truth, that the court of England (though I believe it the fairest in Christendom) does not contain so many beauties as are under our protection here. They generally shape their eye-brows, and, both Greeks and Turks have the custom of putting putting round their eyes a black tincture, that, at a distance, or by candle-light, adds very much to the blackness of them. I fancy many of our ladies would be overjoyed to know this secret; but 'tis too visible by day. They dye their nails a rose colour; but, I own, I cannot enough accustom myself to this fashion, to find any beauty in it.

As to their morality or good conduct, I can fay, like Harlequin, that 'tis just as 'tis with you; and the Turkish ladies don't commit one fin the less for not being Christians. Now that I am a little acquainted with their ways, I cannot forbear admiring, either exemplary difcretion, or extreme stupidity of all the writers that have given accounts of them. 'Tis very easy to fee, they have in reality more liberty than we have. No woman, of what rank foever, is permitted to go into the streets without two Murlins, one that covers her face, all but her eyes; and another, that hides the whole dress of her head, and hangs half way down her back. Their shapes are also wholly concealed by a thing they call a Ferigee, which no woman of any fort fort appears without; this has strait sleeves, that reach to their fingers ends, and it laps all round them, not unlike a riding-hood. In winter, 'tis of cloth; and in summer, of plain stuff or silk. You may guess then how effectually this disguises them, so that there is no distinguishing the great lady from her slave. 'Tis impossible for the most jealous husband to know his wife, when he meets her, and no man dare touch or follow a woman in the street.

This perpetual masquerade gives them entire liberty of following their inclinations without danger of discovery. The most usual method of intrigue is, to send an appointment to the lover to meet the lady at a Jew's shop, which are as notoriously convenient as our Indian houses; and yet, even those who don't make use of them, do not scruple to go to buy penny-worths, and tumble over rich goods, which are chiefly to be found amongst that fort of people. The great ladies seldom let their gallants know who they are; and 'tis so difficult to find it out, that they can very seldom guess at her name, whom they have corresponded with with for above half a year together. You may eafily imagine the number of faithful wives very small in a country where they have nothing to fear from a lover's indifcretion. fince we see so many have the courage to expose themselves to that in this world, and all the threatened punishment of the next, which is never preached to the Turkish damsels. Neither have they much to apprehend from the refentment of their husbands: those ladies that are rich, having all their money in their own hands. Upon the whole, I look upon the Turkish women, as the only free people in the Empire; the very Divan pays a respect to them, and the Grand Signior himself, when a Baffa is executed, never violates the privileges of the Haram, (or womens apartment) which remains unsearched and entire to the widow. They are Queens of their flaves, whom the husband has no permission fo much as to look upon, except it be an old woman or two that his lady chuses. 'Tistrue, their law permits them four wives, but there is no instance of a man of quality that makes makes use of this liberty, or of a woman of rank that would fuffer it. When a husband happens to be inconstant (as those things will happen) he keeps his mistress in a house apart, and vifits her as privately as he can, just as 'tis with you. Amongst all the great men here, I only know the Tefterdar (i. e. Treasurer) that keeps a number of she-slaves for his own use, (that is, on his own fide of the house, for a flave once given to ferve a lady, is entirely at her disposal) and he is spoke of as a libertine, or what we should call a rake; and his wife won't fee him, though fhe continues to live in his house. Thus you see, dear sister, the manners, of mankind do not differ so widely, as our voyage writers would make us believe. Perhaps, it would be more entertaining to add a few furprising customs of my own invention; but nothing feems to me fo agreeable as truth, and I believe nothing so acceptable to you. I conclude therefore, with repeating the great truth of my being,

Dear Sifter, &c.

LETTER XXX.

To Mr. Pope.

Adrianople, April 1, O.S. I DARE fay you expect, at least, fomething very new in this letter, after I have gone a journey, not undertaken, by any Christian, for some hundred years. The most remarkable accident that happened to me, was my being very near over-turned into the Hebrus; and, if I had much regard for the glories that one's name enjoys after death, I should certainly be forry for having missed the romantic conclusion of swimming down the same river in which the musical head of Orpheus repeated verses, so many ages since:

" Caput a cervice revulsum,

"Gurdite cum medio, portans Oeagrius Hebrus

" Volveret, Euridicen vox ipsa, et frigida lingua

" Ah! miseram Euridicen! anima fugiente vocabat, " Euridicen toto referebant flumine ripæ."

Who knows but some of your right wits might have found it a subject affording many poetical poetical turns, and have told the world in an heroic Elegy, that,

As equal were our fouls, fo equal were our fates.

I despair of ever hearing so many fine things said of me, as so extraordinary a death would have given occasion for.

I am at this present moment writing in a house situated on the banks of the Hebrus, which runs under my chamber window. My garden is full of tall cypress trees, upon the branches of which, feveral couple of true turtles are faying foft things to one another from morning till night. How naturally do boughs and vows come into my mind, at this minute? And must not you confess, to my praise, that 'tis more than an ordinary difcretion, that can refift the wicked fuggestions of poetry, in a place where truth, for once, furnishes all the ideas of pastoral. The summer is already far advanced, in this part of the world; and for some miles round Adrianople, the whole ground is laid .

laid out in gardens, and the banks of the rivers are fet with rows of fruit trees, under which all the most considerable Turks divert themselves every evening, not with walking, that is not one of their pleasures; but a fet party of them choose out a green spot, where the shade is very thick, and there they spread a carpet, on which they fit drinking their coffee, and are generally attended by fome flave with a fine voice, or that plays on some instrument. Every twenty paces you may fee one of these little companies, liftening to the dashing of the river; and this tafte is fo universal, that the very gardeners are not without it. I have often feen them and their children fitting on the banks of the river, and playing on a rural instrument, perfectly answering the description of the ancient Fistula, being composed of unequal reeds, with a fimple but agreeable foftness in the found.

Mr. Addison might here make the experiment he speaks of in his travels; there not being one instrument of music among the Greek or Roman statues, that is not to be found in the hands of the people of this country. The young lads generally divert themselves with making garlands for their favourite lambs, which I have often feen painted and adorned with flowers, lying at their feet, while they fung or played. It is not that they ever read Romances. But these are the ancient amusements here, and as natural to them as cudgel-playing and foot-ball to our British swains; the softness and warmth of the climate forbidding all rough exercifes, which were never fo much as heard of amongst them, and naturally inspiring a laziness and aversion to labour, which the great plenty indulges. These gardeners are the only happy race of country people in Turkey. They furnish all the city with fruits and herbs, and feem to live very eafily. They are most of them Greeks, and have little houses in the midst of their gardens, where their wives and daughters take a liberty, not permitted in the town, I mean to go unveiled. These wenches are very neat and handsome, handsome, and pass their time at their looms under the trees.

I no longer look upon Theocritus as a romantic writer; he has only given a plain image of the way of life amongst the peasants of his country, who, before oppression had reduced them to want, were, I suppose, all employed as the better fort of them are now. I don't doubt, had he been born a Briton, but his Idylliums had been filled with descriptions of threshing and churning, both which are unknown here, the corn being all trod out by oxen; and butter (I speak it with forrow) unheard of.

I read over your Homer here with an infinite pleasure, and find several little passages explained, that I did not before entirely comprehend the beauty of: Many of the customs, and much of the dress then in fashion, being yet retained. I don't wonder to find more remains here, of an age so distant, than is to be found in any other country, the Turks not taking that pains to introduce their own manners, ners, as has been generally practifed by other nations, that imagine themselves more polite. It would be too tedious to you to point out all the passages that relate to present customs. But I can affure you, that the Princesses and great ladies pass their time at their looms, embroidering veils and robes, furrounded by their maids, which are always very numerous, in the fame manner as we find Andromache and Helen described. The description of the belt of Menelaus exactly refembles those that are now worn by the great men, fastened before with broad golden clasps, and embroidered round with rich work. The fnowy veil, that Helen throws over her face, is still fashionable; and I never fee half a dozen of old Bashaws (as I do very often) with their reverend beards, fitting basking in the sun, but I recollect good King Priam and his counsellors. Their manner of dancing is certainly the same that Diana is fung to have danced on the banks of Eurotas. The great lady still leads the dance, and is followed by a troop of young girls, who imi-Vol. I. M tate

e .

t

tate her steps, and if she sings, make up the chorus. The tunes are extremely gay and lively, yet with something in them wonderfully soft. The steps are varied according to the pleasure of her that leads the dance, but always in exact time, and infinitely more agreeable than any of our dances, at least in my opinion. I sometimes make one in the train, but am not skilful enough to lead; these are the Grecian dances, the Turkish being very different.

I should have told you, in the first place, that the Eastern manners give a great light into many scripture passages, that appear odd to us, their phrases being commonly what we should call Scripture language. The vulgar Turk is very different from what is spoke at court, or amongst the people of sigure; who always mix so much Arabic and Persian in their discourse, that it may very well be called another language. And 'tis as ridiculous to make use of the expressions commonly used, in speaking to a great man or lady, as it would be to speak broad Yorkshire, or Somersetshire, in the drawing-room. Besides this distinction. they have what they call the fublime, that is, a stile proper for poetry, and which is the exact Scripture stile. I believe you would be pleased to see a genuine example of this; and I am very glad I have it in my power to fatisfy your curiofity, by fending you a faithful copy of the verses that Ibrahim Bassa, the reigning favourite, has made for the young Princess, his contracted wife, whom he is not yet permitted to visit without witnesses, though she is gone home to his house. He is a man of wit and learning; and whether or no he is capable of writing good verse, you may be fure that, on fuch an occasion, he would not want the affistance of the best poets in the empire. Thus the verses may be looked upon as a sample of their finest poetry, and I don't doubt you'll be of my mind, that it is most wonderfully refembling the Song of Solomon, which also was addressed to a Royal Bride.

M 2

r

t

0 n

d

to

in

be

to

TURKISH

TURKISH VERSES addressed to the SULTANA, eldest daughter of SULTAN ACHMET III.

STANZA I.

Ver. The nightingale now wanders in the vines;

1. Her passion is to seek roses.

- 2. I went down to admire the beauty of the vines;

 The sweetness of your charms has ravish'd my soul.
- 3. Your eyes are black and lovely, But wild and disdainful as those of a stag;

STANZA II.

- 1. The wished possession is delayed from day to day, The cruel Sultan ACHMET will not permit me To see those cheeks more wermillion than roses.
- 2. I dare not snatch one of your kisses,

 The sweetness of your charms has ravish'd my soul.
- 3. Your eyes are black and lovely,

 But wild and disdainful as those of a stag.

STANZA III.

1. The wretched IBRAHIM fighs in these werses, One dart from your eyes has pierc'd thro' my heart.

- 2. Ah! when will the hour of possession arrive?

 Must I yet wait a long time?

 The sweetness of your charms has ravish'd my soul.
- 3. Ah! SULTANA! stag-ey'd—an angel amongst angels!

I desire, and, my desire remains unsatisfied. Can you take delight to prey upon my heart?

ıl.

ul.

art.

4h!

STANZA IV.

- 1. My cries pierce the heavens!

 My eyes are without sleep!

 Turn to me, Sultana—let me gaze on thy beauty.
- 2. Adieu——I go down to the grave.

 If you call me——I return.

 My heart is——hot as sulphur;——figh and it will flame.
- 3. Crown of my life, fair light of my eyes!

 My Sultana! my princess!

 I rub my face against the earth; --- I am drown'd in scalding tears--- I rave!

 Have you no compassion? will you not turn to look upon me?

I have

I have taken abundance of pains to get thefe verses in a literal translation; and if you were acquainted with my interpreters, I might spare myself the trouble of affuring you, that they have received no poetical touches from their hands. In my opinion, (allowing for the inevitable faults of a profe translation into a language fo very different) there is a good deal of beauty in them. The epithet of " ftag-ey'd," (though the found is not very agreeable in English) pleases me extremely; and I think it a very lively image of the fire and indifference in his mistress's eyes .- Monsieur Boileau has very justly observed, that we are never to judge of the elevation of an expression in an antient author by the found it carries with us; fince it may be extremely fine with them, when, at the fame time, it appears low or uncouth to us. You are so well acquainted with Homer, you cannot but have observed the same thing, and you must have the same indulgence for all oriental poetry. The repetitions at the end of the two first stanzas are meant for a fort of Chorus, fe

re

ire

ey

eir

e-

n-

of 1," ig-

t a

in

ery

of

au-

e it

the us.

vou

and

ori-

the.

rus,

and

and are agreeable to the antient manner of writing. The music of the verses apparently changes in the third Stanza, where the burden is altered; and I think he very artfully feems more passionate at the conclusion, as 'tis natural for people to warm themselves by their own discourse, especially on a subject in which one is deeply concerned; 'tis certainly far more touching, than our modern custom of concluding a fong of passion, with a turn which is inconfistent with it. The first verse is a description of the season of the year; all the country now being full of Nightingales, whose amours with roses, is an Arabian fable, as well known here, as any part of Ovid amongst us, and is much the same as if an English poem should begin, by faying, -" Now Philomela fings." Or what if I turned the whole into the stile of English poetry, to see how it would look?

STANZA I.

NOW Philomel renews her tender strain, Indulging all the night her pleasing pain;

I Sought

I sought the groves to hear the wanton sing, There saw a face more beauteous than the spring.

Your large stag-eyes where thousand glories play As bright, as lively, but as wild as they.

STANZA II.

In vain I'm promis'd such a heavenly prize.

Ah! cruel Sultan! who delay'st my joys!

While piercing charms transfix my amorous heart,

I dare not snatch one kiss, to ease the smart.

Those eyes like, &c.

STANZA III.

Your wretched lover in these lines complains; From those dear beauties rise his killing pains.

When will the hour of wish'd for bliss arrive, Must I wait longer? Can I wait and live?

Ah! bright Sultana! maid divinely fair! Can you, unpitying see the pains I bear?

STANZA IV.

The Heavens relenting hear my piercing cries, I loath the light, and sleep for sakes my eyes, Turn thee, SULTANA, ere thy lover dies;

Sinking

Sin

Ca

M

I r Pi

of

th

hi

of

I

fe

tl

b tl

it

000

h

n

F

ſ

Sinking to earth, I sigh the last adieu, Call me, my Goddess, and my life renew.

My Queen! my angel! my fond heart's desire! Irave—my bosom burns with heavenly fire! Pity that passion which thy charms inspire.

I have taken the liberty in the fecond verfe. of following what I suppose the true sense of the author, though not literally expressed. By his faying he went down to admire the beauty of the vines, and her charms ravished his foul; I understand a poetical fiction, of having first feen her in a garden, where he was admiring the beauty of the fpring. But I could not forbear retaining the comparison of her eyes with those of a stag, though perhaps the novelty of it may give it a burlefque found in our language. I cannot determine upon the whole, how well I have fucceeded in the translation. neither do I think our English proper to express such violence of passion, which is very feldom felt amongst us. We want, also, those compound words which are very frequent and strong in the Turkish language.

You see I am pretty far gone in oriental learning, and to say truth, I study very hard. I wish my studies may give me an occasion of entertaining your curiosity, which will be the utmost advantage hoped for from them, by,

Your's, &c.

ra

m

I:

cu

lar

fio

am

fan Fre

our

mo

mai

poff

this

Am

grea

LET-

L E T T E R XXXI.

To Mrs. S. C.

Adrianople, April 1, O. S. IN my opinion, dear S. I ought rather to quarrel with you, for not answering my Nimuegen letter of August, till December, than to excuse my not writing again till now. I am fure there is on my fide a very good excuse for filence, having gone such tiresome land-journies, though I don't find the conclufion of them fo bad as you feem to imagine. I am very eafy here, and not in the folitude you fancy me. The great number of Greeks. French, English, and Italians, that are under our protection, make their court to me from morning till night; and I'll affure you, are, many of them, very fine ladies; for there is no possibility for a Christian to live easily under this government, but by the protection of an Ambassador-and the richer they are, the greater is their danger.

Those

Those dreadful stories you have heard of the plague, have very little foundation in truth. I own, I have much ado to reconcile myfelf to the found of a word, which has always given me fuch terrible ideas; though I am convinced there is little more in it, than in a fever. As a proof of this, let me tell you, that we passed through two or three towns most violently infeeted. In the very next house where we lay (in one of those places) two persons died of it. Luckily for me, I was fo well deceived, that I knew nothing of the matter; and I was made believe, that our fecond cook had only a great cold. However, we left our doctor to take care of him, and yesterday they both arrived here in good health; and I am now let into the fecret, that he has had the plague. There are many that escape it, neither is the air ever infected. I am persuaded that it would be as easy a matter to root it out here, as out of Italy and France; but it does so little mischief, they are not very folicitous about it, and are content to fuffer fu

he

ye gi it

gr

to ha pu tee wi

for to tha (w fcr.

afte

fuffer this diffemper, instead of our variety, which they are utterly unacquainted with.

A propos of distempers, I am going to tell you a thing, that will make you wish yourself here. The small pox, so fatal, and so general amongst us, is here intirely harmless, by the invention of engrafting, which is the term they give it. There is a fet of old women, who make it their business to perform the operation, every autumn, in the month of September, when the great heat is abated. People fend to one another to know if any of their family has a mind to have the small-pox; they make parties for this purpose, and when they are met (commonly fifteen or fixteen together) the old woman comes with a nut-shell full of the matter of the best fort of fmall-pox, and asks what vein you please to have opened. She immediately rips open that, you offer to her, with a large needle, (which gives you no more pain than a common fcratch) and puts into the vein as much matter as can lie upon the head of her needle, and after that, binds up the little wound with a hollow hollow bit of shell, and in this manner opens four or five veins. The Grecians have commonly the fuperstition of opening one in the middle of the forehead, one in each arm, and one on the breaft, to mark the fign of the crofs: but this has a very ill effect, all these wounds leaving little fcars, and is not done by those that are not superstitious, who chuse to have them in the legs, or that part of the arm that is concealed. The children or young patients play together all the rest of the day, and are in perfect health to the eighth. Then the fever begins to seize them, and they keep their beds two days, very feldom three. They have very rarely above twenty or thirty in their faces, which never mark, and in eight days time they are as well as before their illness. Where they are wounded, there remains running fores during the distemper, which I don't doubt is a great relief to it. Every year thousands undergo this operation, and the French Ambassador fays pleafantly, that they take the smallpox here by way of diversion, as they take of my pain in I form if I virtibrar kind then the an e

how

Upo

hear

the

the waters in other countries. There is no example of any one that has died in it, and you may believe I am well fatisfied of the fafety of this experiment, fince I intend to try it on my dear little fon. I am patriot enough to take pains to bring this useful invention into fashion in England, and I should not fail to write to fome of our doctors very particularly about it, if I knew any one of them that I thought had virtue enough to deftroy fuch a confiderable branch of their revenue, for the good of mankind. But that distemper is too beneficial to them, not to expose to all their resentment, the hardy wight that should undertake to put an end to it. Perhaps if I live to return I may, however, have courage to war with them. Upon this occasion, admire the heroism in the heart of,

Your friend, &c. &c.

L E T T E R XXXII.

To Mrs. T.

Adrianople, April 1, O.S. 1718.

I CAN now tell dear Mrs. T--, that I am fafely arrived at the end of my very long journey. I will not tire you with the account of the many fatigues I have fuffered. You would rather be informed of the strange things that are to be feen here; and a letter out of Turkey, that has nothing extraordinary in it, would be as great a disappointment as my visitors will receive at London, if I return thither without any rarities to shew them .-What shall I tell you of? --- You never faw camels in your life; and perhaps the description of them will appear new to you; I can assure you, the first fight of them was so to me; and though I have feen hundreds of pictures of those animals, I never faw any that was refembling enough to give a true idea of them. I am going to make a bold observation, and posibly po ma of

nec

col

a h

Pet

hor

thor

then

rides

van.

horse

becai

feem

being bodie

beafts

anima

40111116 are la

VOL

possibly a false one, because nobody has ever made it before me; but I do take them to be of the stag-kind; their legs, bodies, and necks, are exactly shaped like them, and their colour very near the same. 'Tis true, they are much larger, being a great deal higher than a horse, and so swift, that, after the defeat of Peterwaradin, they far outran the swiftest horses, and brought the first news of the loss of the battle to Belgrade. They are never thoroughly tamed; the drivers take care to tye them one to another with strong ropes, fifty in a ftring, led by an ass, on which the driver rides. I have feen three hundred in one caravan. They carry the third part more than a horse; but 'tis a particular art to load them, because of the bunch of their backs. They feem to me very ugly creatures, their heads being ill formed and disproportioned to their bodies. They carry all the burdens; and the beafts deftined to the plough are buffaloes, an animal also you are unacquainted with. They are larger and more clumfy than an ox; they Vol. I. have have short thick black horns close to their heads, which grow turning backwards. They fay this horn looks very beautiful when 'tis well polished. They are all black, with very fhort hair on their hides, and have extremely little white eyes, that make them look like devils. The country people dye their tails, and the hair of their forehead red, by way of ornament. Horses are not put here to any laborious work, nor are they at all fit for it. They are beautiful and full of spirit, but generally little, and not strong, as the breed of colder countries; very gentle, however, with all their vivacity, and also swift and surefooted. I have a little white favourite, that I would not part with on any terms; he prances under me with so much fire, you would think that I had a great deal of courage to dare mount him; yet I'll assure you I never rid a horse so much at my command, in my life. My side-saddle is the first that was ever seen in this part of the world, and is gazed at with as mucil wonder as the ship of Columbus in the first ar

fi

li

T

an

eve

fay

the

of

wit

part

are

perfe

year,

have under

No

memb

be as

lupp

of Tu

miseral

can

first discovery of America. Here are some little birds, held in a fort of religious reverence, and for that reason multiply prodigiously; Turtles on the account of their innocence; and Storks, because they are supposed to make every winter the pilgrimage to Mecca. To fay truth, they are the happiest subjects under the Turkish government, and are so sensible of their privileges, that they walk the streets without fear, and generally build in the low parts of houses. Happy are those whose houses are so distinguished, as the vulgar Turks are perfectly perfuaded, that they will not be, that year, attacked either by fire or pestilence. I have the happiness of one of their facred nests under my chamber window.

Now I am talking of my chamber, I remember, the description of the houses here will be as new to you, as any of the birds or beasts. I suppose you have read in most of our accounts of Turkey, that their houses are the most miserable pieces of building in the world. I can speak very learnedly on that subject,

N 2

having

C

W

P

ft:

fte

lo

th:

fer

has

the

tur

the

pair

win

of

Peri

(my two

with a for rich

having been in fo many of them; and t assure you, 'tis no such thing. We are now lodged in a palace, belonging to the Grand Signior. I really think the manner of building here very agreeable, and proper for the country. 'Tis true, they are not, at all, folicitous to beautify the outfides of their houses, and they are generally built with wood, which, I own, is the cause of many inconveniences; but this is not to be charged on the ill tafte of the people, but on the oppression of the government. Every house at the death of its master, is at the Grand Signior's disposal, and therefore no man cares to make a great expence, which he is not fure his family will be the better for. All their design is to build a house commodious and that will last their lives; and they are very different if it falls down the year after. Every house, great and small, is divided into two diffinct parts, which only join together by a narrow passage. The first house has a large court before it, and open galleries all round it, which is, to me, a thing very very agreeable. This gallery leads to all the chambers, which are commonly large, and with two rows of windows, the first being of painted glass; they seldom build above two stories, each of which has galleries. stairs are broad, and not often above thirty steps. This is the house belonging to the lord, and the adjoining one is called the Haram, that is, the ladies' apartment, (for the name of feraglio is peculiar to the Grand Signior;) it has also a gallery running round it towards the garden, to which all the windows are turned, and the same number of chambers as the other, but more gay and splendid, both in painting and furniture. The fecond row of windows are very low, with grates like those of convents, the rooms are all spread with Persian carpets, and raised at one end of them (my chambers are raifed at both ends) about two feet. This is the Sopha, which is laid with a richer fort of carpet, and all round it a fort of couch raifed half a foot, covered with rich filk according to the fancy or magnificence of the owner. Mine is of scarlet cloth with a gold fringe; round about this are placed, standing against the wall, two rows of cushions, the first very large, and the rest little ones; and here the Turks display their greatest magnificence. They are generally brocade, or embroidery of gold wire upon white fattin .-Nothing can look more gay and fplendid .-These feats are also so convenient and easy, that I believe I shall never endure chairs as long as I live-The rooms are low, which I think no fault, and the cieling is always of wood, generally inlaid or painted with flowers, They open in many places with folding doors, and ferve for cabinets, I think more conveniently than ours. Between the windows are little arches to fet pots of perfume, or baskets of flowers. But what pleases me best, is the fashion of having marble fountains in the lower part of the room, which throw up feveral spouts of water, giving, at the same time an agreeable coolness, and a pleasant dashing found, falling from one bason to another. Some of these are very magnificent.

N 3

Each

r

t

0 0 fo

ta

al

k

ra

a

of

bi

th an ba

ot

clo

of

wi

and

mi

Each house has a bagnio, which confists generally in two or three little rooms leaded on the top, paved with marble, with basons, cocks of water, and all conveniencies for either hot or cold baths.

You will perhaps be furprifed at an account fo different from what you have been entertained with by the common voyage-writers, who are very fond of speaking of what they don't know. It must be under a very particular character, or on some extraordinary occasion, that a Christian is admitted into the house of a man of quality, and their Harams are always forbidden ground. Thus they can only speak of the outfide, which makes no great appearance; and the womens apartments are always built backward, removed from fight, and have no other prospect than the gardens, which are inclosed with very high walls. There is none of our parterres in them; but they are planted with high trees, which give an agreeable shade, and, to my fancy, a pleafing view. In the midst of the garden is the Chiosk, that is, a large room, commonly beautified with a fine fountain in the midst of it. It is raised nine or ten steps, and enclosed with gilded lattices, round which, vines, jeffamines, and honeyfuckles, make a fort of green wall. Large trees are planted round this place, which is the scene of their greatest pleasures, and where the ladies spend most of their hours, employed by their musick or embroidery .-In the public gardens, there are public Chiofks, where people go that are not fowell accommodated at home, and drink their coffee, sherbet, &c. Neither are they ignorant of a more durable manner of building; their mosques are all of free-stone, and the public Hanns, or Inns, extremely magnificent, many of them taking up a large square, built round with shops under stone arches, where poor artificers are lodged gratis. They have always a mosque joining to them, and the body of the Hann is a most noble hall, capable of holding three or four hundred persons, the court extremely spacious, and cloifters round

It it it a more reasonable piece of charity than the founding of convents.—I think I have now told you a great deal for once. If you don't like my choice of subjects, tell me what you would have me write upon; there is nobody more desirous to entertain you than, dear Mrs. T.

Yours, &c. &c.

LETTER XXXIII.

To the Countess of ---

Adrianople, April 18, O.S.

I WROTE to you, dear fifter, and to all my other English correspondents, by the last ship, and only Heaven can tell, when I shall have another opportunity of sending to you; but I cannot forbear to write again, though perhaps my letter may lye upon my hands these two months. To confess the truth, my head is so full of my entertainment yesterday, that 'tis absolutely necessary, for my own repose, to give it some vent. Without farther preface I will then begin my story.

I was invited to dine with the Grand Vizier's lady, and it was with a great deal of pleasure I prepared myself for an entertainment, which was never before given to any Christian. I thought I should very little satisfy her curiosity, (which I did not doubt was a considerable motive to the invitation) by going in a dress she

ſ

d

h

fi

m

was used to see, and therefore dressed myself in the court habit of Vienna, which is much more magnificent than ours. However, I chose to go incognito, to avoid any disputes about ceremony, and went in a Turkish coach only attended by my woman, that held up my train, and the Greek lady, who was my interpretess. I was met, at the court door, by her black Eunuch, who helped me out of the coach with great respect, and conducted me through feveral rooms, where her she-slaves, finely dreffed, were ranged on each fide. the innermost, I found the lady sitting on her fofa, in a fable veft. She advanced to meet me, and prefented me half a dozen of her friends, with great civility. She feemed a very good woman, near fifty years old. I was furprifed to observe so little magnificence in her house, the furniture being all very moderate; and, except the habits and number of her flaves, nothing about her appeared expenfive. She gueffed at my thoughts, and told me, she was no longer of an age to spend either either her time or money in superfluities; that her whole expence was in charity, and her whole employment praying to God. There was no affectation in this speech; both she and her husband are entirely given up to devotion. He never looks upon any other woman; and what is much more extraordinary, touches no bribes, notwithstanding the example of all his predecessors. He is so scrupulous in this point, he would not accept Mr. W---'s present, till he had been affured over and over, that it was a fettled perquifite of his place, at the entrance of every Ambassador. She entertained me with all kind of civility, till dinner came in, which was ferved, one dish at a time, to a vast number, all finely dreffed after their manner, which I don't think so bad as you have perhaps heard it represented. I am a very good judge of their eating, having lived three weeks in the house of an Effendi at Belgrade, who gave us very magnificent dinners, dreffed by his own cooks. The first week they pleased me extremely; but, I own, I then begun to grow weary

1

h

fe

tl

p

g

th

20 weary of their table, and defired our own cook might add a dish or two after our manner. But I attribute this to custom, and am very much inclined to believe, that an Indian who had never taffed of either, would prefer their cookery to ours. Their fauces are very high, all the roast very much done. They use a great deal of very rich spice. The soup is served for the last dish; and they have, at least, as great a variety of ragouts, as we have. I was very forry I could not eat of as many as the good lady would have had me, who was very earnest in serving me of every thing. The treat concluded with coffee and perfumes, which is a high mark of respect; two slaves kneeling cenfed my hair, clothes, and handkerchief. After this ceremony, she commanded her flaves to play and dance, which they did with their guitars in their hands, and she excused to me their want of skill, faying she took no care to accomplish them in that art.

I returned her thanks, and foon after took my leave. I was conducted back in the fame manner

manner I entered, and would have gone strait to my own house, but the Greek lady, with me, earnestly sollicited me to visit the Kahya's lady, faying, he was the fecond officer in the Empire. and ought indeed to be looked upon as the first, the Grand Vizier having only the name, while he exercised the authority. I had found so little diversion in the Vizier's Haram, that I had no mind to go into another. But her importunity prevailed with me, and I am extremely glad, I was fo complaifant. All things here were with quite another air than at the Grand Vizier's; and the very house confesfed the difference between an old devotee, and a young beauty. It was nicely clean and magnificent. I was met at the door by two black Eunuchs, who led me through a long gallery, between two ranks of beautiful young girls, with their hair finely plaited, almost hanging to their feet, and dreffed in fine light damasks, brocaded with filver. I was forry that decency did not permit me to ftop to confider them nearer. But that thought was loft

W

b

fo P

or

at

ye

ric

the (fc fac

bee

lost upon my entrance into a large room, or rather pavillion, built round with gilded fashes, which were most of them thrown up, and the trees planted near them gave an agreeable shade, which hindered the fun from being troublefome. The jeffamines and honey-fuckles that twisted round their trunks, shed a soft perfume, increased by a white marble fountain playing fweet water in the lower part of the room, which fell into three or four basons, with a pleafing found. The roof was painted with all forts of flowers, falling out of gilded baskets, that seemed tumbling down. On a fofa, raised three steps, and covered with fine Perfian carpets, fat the Kahya's lady, leaning on cushions of white fattin embroidered; and at her feet fat two young girls about twelve years old, lovely as angels, dreffed perfectly rich, and almost covered with jewels. But they were hardly seen near the fair Fatima, (for that is her name) fo much her beauty effaced every thing I have feen, nay, all that has been called lovely, either in England or Germany.

many. I must own, that I never faw any thing fo gloriously beautiful, nor can I recollect a face that would have been taken notice of near her's. She stood up to receive me, faluting me, after their fashion, putting her hand to her heart with a sweetness full of majesty, that no court breeding could ever give. She ordered cushions to be given me, and took care to place me in the corner, which is the place of honour. I confess, though the Greek lady had before given me a great opinion of her beauty, I was so struck with admiration, that I could not, for some time, speak to her, being wholly taken up in gazing. That furprizing harmony of features! That charming refult of the whole! That exact proportion of body! That lovely bloom of complexion unfullied by art! The unutterable enchantment of her fmile ;-But her eyes !-- Large and black, with all the foft languishment of the blue! every turn of her face discovering some new grace.

After

fe

fa

ex

al

ne

ye

pe:

WO

a ( bar

cele

her.

S

flow

shap

Vo

After my first surprize was over, I endeavoured by nicely examining her face, to find out some imperfection, without any fruit of my fearch, but my being clearly convinced of the error of that vulgar notion, that a face exactly proportioned, and perfectly beautiful, would not be agreeable; nature having done for her, with more fuccess, what Apelles is faid to have effayed by a collection of the most exact features to form a perfect face. Add to all this a behaviour fo full of grace and fweetness, such easy motions with an air so majestic, yet free from stiffness or affectation, that I am perfuaded could she be fuddenly transported upon the most polite throne of Europe, no body would think her other than born and bred to be a Queen, though educated in a country we call barbarous. To fay all in a word, our most celebrated English beauties would vanish near her.

She was dreffed in a Caftan of gold brocade, flowered with filver, very well fitted to her shape, and shewing to admiration the beauty of Vol. I.

a

fa

n

th

th fce

pla

be

bet

cor

dan

fere

cou

cert

mot

paul

and

man

and .

have

her bosom, only shaded by the thin gauze of her shift. Her drawers were pale pink, her waistcoat green and filver, her slippers white fattin, finely embroidered; her lovely arms adorned with bracelets of diamonds, and her broad girdle fet round with diamonds; upon her head a rich Turkish handkerchief of pink and silver, her own fine black hair hanging a great length, in various treffes, and on one fide of her head fome bodkins of jewels. I am afraid you will accuse me of extravagance in this description. I think I have read some where, that women always speak in rapture, when they speak of beauty, and I cannot imagine why they should not be allowed to do fo. I rather think it a virtue to be able to admire without any mixture of defire or envy. The gravest writers have fpoke with great warmth of fome celebrated pictures and statues. The workmanship of heaven certainly excels all our weak imitations, and, I think, has a much better claim to our praise. For my part, I am not ashamed to own, I took more pleasure in looking on the beauteous beauteous Fatima, than the finest piece of sculpture could have given me. She told me the two girls at her feet were her daughters, though she appeared too young to be their mother. Here fair maids were ranged below the Sofa, to the number of twenty, and put me in mind of the pictures of the antient nymphs. I did not think all nature could have furnished such a scene of beauty. She made them a fign to play and dance. Four of them immediately begun to play fome foft airs on instruments between a lute and a guitar, which they accompanied with their voices, while the others danced by turns. This dance was very different from what I had feen before. Nothing could be more artful, or more proper to raife certain ideas. The tunes fo foft; -- The motions fo languishing?—Accompanied with pauses and dying eyes !-half falling back, and then recovering themselves in so artful a manner, that I am very positive, the coldest and most rigid prude upon earth, could not have looked upon them without thinking of 0 2 " fomething

-

m

d

he .

us

" fomething not to be spoke of."-I suppose you may have read that the Turks have no music, but what is shocking to the ears; but this account is from those who never heard any but what is played in the ffreets, and is just as reasonable, as if a foreigner should take his ideas of English music from the bladder and string, or the marrow-bones and cleavers. I can affure you, that the music is extremely pathetic; 'tis true I am inclined to prefer the Italian, but perhaps I am partial. I am acquainted with a Greek lady, who fings better than Mrs. Robinson; and is very well skilled, in both, who gives the preference to the Turkish. 'Tis certain they have very fine natural voices, these were very agreeable. When the dance was over, four fair flaves came into the room, with filver cenfors in their hands, and perfumed the air with amber, aloes-wood, and other fcents. After this, they ferved me coffee upon their knees, in the finest Japan china, with foucoups of filver gilt. The lovely Fatima entertained me all this this while in the most polite agreeable manner, calling me often Uzelle Sultanam, or the beautiful Sultana, and desiring my friendship with the best grace in the world, lamenting that she could not entertain me in my own language.

When I took my leave, two maids brought in a fine filver basket of embroidered hand-kerchiefs; she begg'd I would wear the richest for her sake, and gave the others to my woman and interpretess.—I retired, through the same ceremonies as before, and could not help thinking I had been some time in Mahomet's paradise, so much was I charmed with what I had seen. I know not how the relation of it appears to you. I wish it may give you part of my pleasure; for I would have my dear sister share in all the diversions of,

Your's, &c.&c.

LETTER XXXIV.

To the Abbot of ----.

Adrianople, May 17, O. S. I AM going to leave Adrianople, and I would not do it, without giving you fome account of all that is curious in it. which I have taken a great deal of pains to fee. I will not trouble you with wife differtations, whether or no this is the fame city, that was anciently called Orestesit or Oreste, which you know better than I do. It is now called from the Emperor Adrian, and was the first European feat of the Turkish Empire, and has been the favourite residence of many Sultans. MA-HOMET the fourth, and MUSTAPHA, the brother of the reigning Emperor, were fo fond of it, that they wholly abandoned Constantinople, which humour so far exasperated the Janizaries, that it was a confiderable motive to the rebellions that deposed them. Yet this man feems to love to keep his court here.

I can

I can give you no reason for this partiality. 'Tis true, the fituation is fine, and the country all round very beautiful; but the air is extremely bad, and the Seraglio itself is not free from the ill effect of it. The town is faid to be eight miles in compass, I suppose they reckon in the gardens. There are some good houses in it, I mean large ones; for the architecture of their palaces never makes any great fhew. It is now very full of people; but they are most of them such as follow the court, or camp, and when they are removed, I am told 'tis no populous city. The river Maritza (anciently the Hebrus) on which it is fituated, is dried up every fummer, which contributes very much to make it unwholesome. It is now a very pleasant stream. There are two noble bridges built over it. I had the curiofity to go to fee the Exchange in my Turkish dress, which is disguise sufficient. Yet I own, I was not very easy when I saw it crowded with Janizaries; but they dare not be rude to a woman, and made way for me with as much respect, respect, as if I had been in my own figure. It is half a mile in length, the roof arched, and kept extremely neat. It holds three hundred and fixty-five shops, furnished with all forts of rich goods exposed to fale in the same manner as at the New Exchange in London, but the pavement is kept much neater, and the shops are all fo clean, they feem just new painted .-Idle people of all forts walk here for their diversion, or amuse themselves with drinking coffee, or sherbet, which is cried about as oranges and fweet-meats are in our playhouses. I observed most of the rich tradesmen were Jews. That people are in incredible power in this country. They have many privileges above all the natural Turks themselves, and have formed a very confiderable commonwealth here, being judged by their own laws. They have drawn the whole trade of the Empire into their hands, partly by the firm union amongst themselves, and partly by the idle temper and want of industry in the Turks. Every Bassa has his Jew, who is his "homme " d'affaires;"

f

" d'affaires;" he is let into all his secrets, and does all his bufinefs. No bargain is made, no bribe received, no merchandife disposed of. but what paffes through their hands. They are the physicians, the stewards, and the interpreters of all the great men. You may judge how advantageous this is to a people who never fail to make use of the smallest advantages. They have found the fecret of making themselves fo necessary, that they are certain of the protection of the court, whatever ministry is in power. Even the English, French, and Italian merchants, who are sensible of their artifices, are, however, forced to trust their affairs to their negotiation, nothing of trade being managed without them, and the meanest amongst them being too important to be disobliged, fince the whole body take care of his interests with as much vigour as they would those of the most considerable of their members. They are many of them vaftly rich, but they take care to make little public fhew of it; though they live in their houses in the the utmost luxury and magnificence. This copious subject has drawn me from my description of the exchange, founded by Ali Bassa, whose name it bears. Near it is the Sherski, a ftreet of a mile in length, full of shops of all kind of fine merchandize, but excessive dear, nothing being made here. It is covered on the top with boards to keep out the rain, that merchants may meet conveniently in all weathers. The Besiten near it, is another exchange, built upon pillars, where all forts of horse furniture are fold. Glittering every where with gold, rich embroidery and jewels, it makes a very agreeable shew. From this place I went in my Turkish coach, to the camp, which is to move in a few days to the frontiers. The Sultan is already gone to his tents, and all his court; the appearance of them is indeed, very magnificent. Those of the great men are rather like palaces than tents, taking up a great compais of ground, and being divided into a vast number of apartments. They are all of green, and the Bassas of three Tails, have those in

2

2

ev

W

me

COI

wa

conspicuous manner before their tents, which are adorned on the top with gilded balls, more or less, according to their different ranks. The ladies go in coaches to see the camp, as eagerly as ours did to that of Hyde Park; but 'tis very easy to observe, that the soldiers do not begin the campaign with any great chearfulness. The war is a general grievance upon the people, but particularly hard upon the tradesmen, now that the Grand Signior is resolved to lead his army in person. Every company of them is obliged, upon this occasion, to make a present according to their ability.

I took the pains of rifing at fix in the morning to fee the ceremony, which did not however begin till eight. The Grand Signior was at the Seraglio window, to fee the procession, which passed through the principal streets. It was preceded by an Essendi, mounted on a camel, richly furnished, reading aloud the Alcoran, finely bound, laid upon a cushion. He was surrounded by a parcel of boys, in white, singing finging some verses of it, followed by a man dressed in green boughs, representing a clean husbandman sowing seed. After him several reapers with garlands of ears of corn, as Ceres is pictured, with feythes in their hands feeming to mow. Then a little machine drawn by oxen. in which was a wind-mill, and boys employed in grinding corn, followed by another machine, drawn by buffaloes carrying an oven, and two more boys, one employed in kneading the bread, and another in drawing it out of the oven. These boys threw little cakes on both sides aamongst the crowd, and were followed by the whole company of bakers marching on foot, two by two, in their best clothes, with cakes, loaves, pasties and pies of all forts on their heads, and after them two buffoons or jackpuddings, with their faces and clothes smeared with meal, who diverted the mob with their antic gestures. In the same manner followed all the companies of trade in the Empire; the nobler fort, fuch as jewellers, mercers, &c. finely mounted, and many of the pageants

h

m

ft

th

geants that represent their trades, perfectly magnificent; amongst which that of the Furriers made one of the best figures, being a very large machine fet round with the skins of ermines, foxes, &c. fo well stuffed, that the animals feemed to be alive, and followed by music and dancers. I believe they were, upon the whole, twenty thousand men, all ready to follow his Highness if he commanded them. The rear was closed by the volunteers, who came to beg the honour of dying in his fervice. This prrt of the shew seemed to me so barbarous, that I removed from the window upon the first appearance of it. They were all naked to the middle. Some had their arms pierced through with arrows left sticking in them. Others had them flicking in their heads, the blood trickling down their faces, Some flashed their arms with sharp knives, making the blood fpring out upon those that flood there; and this is looked upon as an expression of their zeal for glory. I am told, that some make use of it to advance their love; and when they are near the window, where their mistress stands (all the women in town being veiled to see this spectacle) they stick another arrow for her sake, who gives some sign of approbation and encouragement to this gallantry. The whole shew lasted for near eight hours, to my great sorrow, who was heartily tired, though I was in the house of the widow of the Captain Bassa (Admiral) who refreshed me with cossee, sweat-meats, sherbet, &c. with all possible civility.

I went two days after to fee the Mosque of Sultan Selim I. which is a building very well worth the curiosity of a traveller. I was dressed in my Turkish habit, and admitted without scruple; though I believe they guessed who I was, by the extreme officiousness of the door keeper, to shew me every part of it. It is situated very advantageously in the midst of the city, and in the highest part of it, making a very noble shew. The first court has four gates, and the innermost three. They are both of them surrounded with cloisters, with

a

ſ

P

0 tl

be no

in

marble pillars of the Ionic order finely polished, and of very lively colours, the whole pavement is of white marble, and the roof of the cloifters divided into feveral cupolas or domes, headed with gilt balls on the top. In the midst of each court are fine fountains of white marble; and before the great gate of the Mosque, a portico with green marble pillars, which has five gates, the body of the Mosque being one prodigious dome. I understand fo little of architecture, I dare not pretend to speak of the proportions. It seemed to be very regular; this I am fure of, it is vastly high, and I thought it the noblest building I ever faw. It has two rows of marble galleries on pillars, with marble balustres; the pavement is also covered with Persian carpets. In my opinion, it is a great addition to its beauty, that it is not divided into pews, and encumbered with forms and benches like our churches; nor the pillars (which are most of them red and white marble) disfigured by the little tawdry images and pictures, that give Roman Catholic tholic churches the air of toy-shops. The walls feemed to be inlaid, with fuch very lively colours, in small flowers, that I could not imagine what stones had been made use of. But going near, I faw they were crusted with japan china, which has a very beautiful effect. In the midst hung a vast lamp of filver gilt; befides which I do verily believe, there was at least two thousand of a lesser fize. This must look very glorious when they are all lighted: but being at night, no women are fuffered to enter. Under the large lamp is a great pulpit of carved wood gilt, and just by, a fountain to wash, which you know is an essential part of their devotion. In one corner is a little gallery enclosed with gilded lattices for the Grand Signior. At the upper end a large niche, very like an altar, raifed two steps, covered with gold brocade, and flanding before it two filver gilt candlesticks, the height of a man, and in them white wax candles as thick as a man's wrist. The outside of the Mosque is adorned with towers vaftly high, gilt on the top, from whence

t

N

p

in ba

hi

fee

the

of

is or

I

feer

den

whence the Imaums call the people to prayers. I had the curiofity to go up one of them, which is contrived fo artfully, as to give furprize to all that fee it. There is but one door, which leads to three different flair-cases, going to the three different stories of the tower, in fuch a manner, that three priefts may afcend, rounding, without ever meeting each other; a contrivance very much admired. Behind the Mosque is an Exchange full of shops, where poor artificers are lodged gratis. I faw feveral Dervifes at their prayers here. They are dreffed in a plain piece of woollen, with their arms bare, and a woollen cap on their heads, like a high crowned hat without brims. I went to fee some other Mosques, built much after the fame manner, but not comparable, in point of magnificence, to this I have described, which is infinitely beyond any church in Germany or England; I won't talk of other countries I have not feen. The Seraglio does not feem a very magnificent palace. But the gardens are very large, plentifully supplied with VOL. I. water, water, and full of trees; which is all I know of them, having never been in them.

I tell you nothing of the order of Mr. W—'s entry, and his audience. These things are always the same, and have been so often described, I won't trouble you with the repetition. The young Prince, about eleven years old, sits near his father when he gives audience; he is a handsome boy, but probably will not immediately succeed the Sultan, there being two sons of Sultan Mustapha (his eldest brother) remaining; the eldest about twenty years old, on whom the hopes of the people are fixed. This reign has been bloody and avaritious. I am apt to believe they are very impatient to see the end of it. I am, Sir, Your's, &c. &c.

P. S. I will write to you again from Conftantinople.

LETTERS

OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

Lady M—y W——y M——e.

Vol. I.

e a w. True

177 TO 14 TO 14 TO 15

to be included in the careflence of odT .

190

ADVERTISEMENT

OF THE

EDITOR.

THE editor of these Letters, who during his residence at Venice, was honoured with the esteem and friendship of their ingenious and elegant author, presents them to the publick, for the two following reasons:

First, Because it was the manifest intention of the late Lady M—y W—y M—e, that this SELECT COLLECTION of her Letters should be communicated to the public; an intention declared not only to the Editor, but to a few more chosen friends, to whom she gave copies of these incomparable Letters.

The fecond and principal reason that has engaged the editor to let this collection see the light, is, that the publication of these letters will be an immortal monument to the memory of Lady M——y W——y; and will shew, as long as the English language endures, the sprightliness of her wit, the solidity of her judgment, the extent of her knowledge, the elegance of her taste, and the excellence of her real character.

The

ADVERTISEMENT.

The SELECT COLLECTION, here published, was faithfully transcribed from the original manuscript of her ladyship at Venice.

The Letters from Ratisbon, Vienna, Dresden, Peterwaradin, Belgrade, Adrianople, Constantinople, Pera, Tunis, Genoa, Lyons and Paris, are, certainly, the most curious and interesting part of this publication, and both in point of master and form, are, to say no more of them, singularly worthy of the curiosity and attention of all men of taste, and even of all women of fashion. As to those semale readers, who read for improvement, and think their beauty an insipid thing, if it is not seasoned by intellectual charms, they will find in these Letters what they seek for, and will behold in their author, an ornament and model to their sex.

LETTER XXXV.

To the Abbot -....

Constantinople, May 29, O.S.

I HAVE had the advantage of very fine weather all my journey, and as the fummer is now in its beauty, I enjoyed the pleasure of fine prospects; and the meadows being full of all forts of garden flowers, and sweet herbs, my berlin perfumed the air as it pressed them. The Grand Signior furnished us with thirty covered waggons for our baggage, and five coaches of the country for my women. We found the road full of the great Spahis and their equipages coming out of Asia to the war. They always travel with tents; but I chose to lie in houses all the way. I will not trouble you with the names of the villages we passed, in which there was nothing remarkable, but at Ciorlei, where there was a Conac, or little Seraglio, built for the use of the Grand Signior, when he goes this road. I had the curiofity ofity to view all the apartments destined for the ladies of his court. They were in the midst of a thick grove of trees, made fresh by fountains: but I was most surprised to see the walls almost covered with little distichs of Turkish verse, writ with pencils. I made my interpreter explain them to me, and I sound several of them very well turned; though I easily believed him, that they had lost much of their beauty in the translation. One was literally thus in English:

We come into this world; we lodge and we depart; He never goes that lodg'd within my heart.

The rest of our journey was through fine painted meadows, by the side of the sea of Marmora, the ancient Propontis. We lay the next night at Selivrea, anciently a noble town.—It is now a good sea-port, and neatly built enough, and has a bridge of thirty-two arches. Here is a samous ancient Greek church.—I had given one of my coaches to a Greek lady, who desired the conveniency of travelling with me; me; she defigned to pay her devotions, and I was glad of the opportunity of going with her. I found it an ill-built edifice, fet out with the fame fort of ornaments, but less rich, as the Roman Catholic churches. They shewed me a faint's body, where I threw a piece of money; and a picture of the Virgin Mary, drawn by the hand of St. Luke, very little to the credit of his painting; but, however, the finest Madona of Italy is not more famous for her miracles. The Greeks have a monstrous taste in their pictures, which, for more finery, are always drawn upon a gold ground. You may imagine what a good air this has; but they have no notion either of shade or proportion. They have a bishop here, who officiated in his purple robe, and fent me a candle almost as big as myself for a present, when I was at my lodging. We lay that night at a town called Bujuk Cekmege, or Great Bridge; and the night following at Kujuk Cekmege, or Little Bridge. in a very pleasant lodging, formerly a monastery of Dervises, having before it a large court, Vol. I. encomencompassed with marble cloisters, with a good fountain in the middle. The prospect from this place, and the gardens round it, is the most agreeable I have seen; and shews, that monks of all religions know how to chuse their retirements. 'Tis now belonging to a Hogia, or school-master, who teaches boys here. I asked him to shew me his own apartment, and was furprised to see him point to a tall cypress tree in the garden, on the top of which was a place for a bed for himfelf, and a little lower, one for his wife and two children, who flept there every night. I was so much diverted with the fancy, I resolved to examine his nest nearer, but after going up fifty steps, I found I had still fifty to go up, and then I must climb from branch to branch, with some hazard of my neck, I thought it therefore the best way to come down again.

We arrived the next day at Constantinople; but I can yet tell you very little of it, all my time having been taken up with receiving visits, which are, at least, a very good entertainment ties, and their beauty highly improved by the high taste of their dress. Our palace is in Pera, which is no more a suburb of Constantinople, than Westminster is a suburb to London. All the Ambassadors are lodged very near each other. One part of our house shews us the Port, the City, and the Seraglio, and the distant hills of Asia; perhaps, all together, the most beautiful prospect in the world.

A certain French author fays, Constantinople is twice as big as Paris. Mr. W———y is unwilling to own 'tis bigger than London, though I confess it appears to me to be so; but I don't believe 'tis so populous. The burying fields about it, are certainly much larger than the whole city. 'Tis surprizing what a vast deal of land is lost this way in Turkey. Sometimes I have seen burying places of several miles, belonging to very inconsiderable villages, which were formerly great towns, and retain no other mark of their antient grandeur, than this dismal one. On no occasion do they ever

Q2

remove

Some of them are costly enough, being of very fine marble. They set up a pillar with a carved turbant on the top of it to the memory of a man; and as the turbants, by their different shapes, shew the quality or profession, 'tis in a manner putting up the arms of the deceased. Besides, the pillar commonly bears an inscription in gold letters. The ladies have a simple pillar, without other ornament, except those that die unmarried, who have a rose on the top of their monument. The sepulchres of particular families are railed in, and planted round with trees. Those of the Sultans, and some great men, have lamps constantly burning in them,

When I spoke of their religion, I forgot to mention two particularities, one of which I had read of, but it seemed so odd to me, I could not believe it; yet tis certainly true; that when a man has divorced his wife, in the most solemn manner, he can take her again upon no other terms, than permitting another man to pass a night with her; and there are some fome examples of those, who have submitted to this law, rather than not have back their beloved. The other point of doctrine is very extraordinary. Any woman that dies unmarried, is looked upon to die in a state of reprobation. To confirm this belief, they reason, that the end of the creation of woman, is to increase and multiply, and that she is only properly employed in the works of her calling, when the is bringing forth children, or taking care of them, which are all the virtues that God expects from her. And indeed their way of life, which shuts them out of all public commerce, does not permit them any other .-Our vulgar notion, that they don't own women to have any fouls, is a miftake. 'Tis true they fay, they are not of so elevated a kind, and therefore must not hope to be admitted into the Paradise appointed for the men, who are to be entertained by celeftial beauties. But there is a place of happiness destined for fouls of the inferior order, where all good women are to be in eternal bliss. Many of them are very superstitious, and will not remain widows ten days, for fear of dying in the reprobate state of a useless creature. But those that like their liberty, and are not slaves to their religion, content themselves with marrying when they are asraid of dying. This is a piece of theology very different from that which teaches nothing to be more acceptable to God, than a vow of perpetual virginity: which divinity is most rational, I leave you to determine.

I have already made some progress in a collection of Greek medals. Here are several professed antiquaries, who are ready to serve any body that desires them. But you cannot imagine how they stare in my face, when I enquire about them, as if nobody was permitted to seek after medals, till they were grown a piece of antiquity themselves. I have got some very valuable ones of the Macedonian Kings, particularly one of Perseus, so lively, I fancy I can see all his ill qualities in his face. I have a Porphyry head finely cut, of the true Greek sculpture; sculpture; but who it represents, is to be gueffed at by the learned when I return. For you are not to suppose these antiquaries (who are all Greeks) know any thing. Their trade is only to fell; they have correspondents at Aleppo, Grand Cairo, in Arabia and Paleftine, who fend them all they can find, and very often great heaps, that are only fit to melt into pans and kettles. They get the best price they can for any of them, without knowing those that are valuable, from those that are not. Those that pretend to skill, generally find out the image of some Saint in the medals of the Greek cities. One of them, shewing me the figure of a Pallas, with a victory in her hand on a reverse, affured me, it was the Virgin holding a crucifix. The same man offered me the head of a Socrates, on a Sardonix; and, to enhance the value, give him the title of Saint Augustin. I have bespoke a mummy, which, I hope, will come fafe to my hands, notwithflanding the misfortune that befel a very fine one, defigned for the King of Sweden. He gave gave a great price for it, and the Turks took it into their heads, that he must have some considerable project depending upon it. They fancied it the body of God knows who, and that the state of their empire mystically depended on the conservation of it. Some old prophecies were remembered upon this occasion, and the mummy committed prisoner to the Seven Towers, where it has remained under close confinement ever since. I dare not try my interest in so considerable a point, as the release of it; but I hope mine will pass without examination.— I can tell you nothing more at present of this samous city. When I have looked a little about me, you shall hear from me again. I am, Sir,

Your's, &c. &c.

End of the First Volume.

